Preface
by A. Wezler

It is merely a coincidence that after Oskar von Hinüber's A Handbook of Pāli Literature we now have Thomas Oberlies' Pāli. A Grammar of the Language of the Theravāda Tipitaka. But this coincidence is not by any means unwelcome in that it once more underlines an important turning point in the development of Indian philology (in the continental sense of the word), viz. the breaking away from one-sided concentration on Sanskrit and Sanskrit literature alone and the extension of Indological studies to Middle Indo-Aryan languages, and the literature written in them. This 'change-of-paradigm' is not, as is well-known, a recent event; but in spite of the, indeed, already long tradition of Pāli and Prakrit studies it is not yet possible to say that they are on a par with Sanskrit studies and have fully caught up with them.

The general significance of Dr. Oberlies' Pāli grammar, which we are most happy to be able to publish in our series, is therefore a twofold one: Firstly, it is an attempt, and in my view a highly successful one, to bring together, analyse critically and utilize for his new handbook of the Pāli language all that has been achieved by scholars working almost exclusively or mainly or even sporadically on problems connected with this language, in the last eighty years, i.e. since the publication in 1916 Wilhelm Geiger's Pāli Literatur und Sprache as part of the predecessor of the JPSAS, the old Grundriss der Indo-Arischen Philologie und Altertumskunde. And this part of our Indological knowledge has indeed grown in a most impressive manner thanks to the scholarly endeavours of not a few Indologists like e.g. L. Alsdorf, N. Balbir, H. Bechert, H. Berger, W. B. Bollée, C. Caillat, T. J. Elizarenkova, O. von Hinüber, St. Insler, K. R. Norman, O. Pind, J. Sakamoto-Gotō, and Th. Oberlies himself, and, of course, also Indo-Europeanists like e.g. K. Hoffmann and C. Haebler. But, secondly, this new grammar of Pāli will promote no less the study of this language and the vast literature composed in it. It is meant not only for fellow-scholars as a work of reference but also for students as an indispensable tool. Indeed, it is primarily for their benefit that all Pāli elements are also translated.

Yet this new grammar is not, of course, just the outcome of an intelligent, diligent and comprehensive gathering of relevant materials. In reality it is the original work of a young scholar, and close friend of mine, who after his doctorate familiarized himself systematically with Pāli philology, his first two articles in this field of studies being devoted, significantly enough, to problems of the language and to a Jātaka story from the famous collection. The continuation of this twofold interest is further attested in his list of publications if one goes through it from 1989/90 to the last entry (of the year 2000). Yet another feature of Oberlies' involvement with Pāli studies becomes evident when one reads this list: Studies of individual problems, linguistic, text-critical or literary, lead finally to a comprehensive and fundamental discussion of the overarching problems. Thus his meticulous examination of various Jātakas – which shows how much Oberlies was able to learn from Alsdorf – are crowned by his two articles of 1993 and 1997 "Der Text der Jātaka-Gāthās in Fausbølls Ausgabe (Stand und Aufgaben der Jātaka-Forschung I)" and id. "II". Similarly, he winds up his studies on problems of the grammar of the Pāli language in the article "Stray remarks on Pāli phonology, morphology, and vocabulary. Addenda et corrigenda to Geiger's Pāli Grammar" of 1996. And yet, reading this article again one realizes that even this was no more than a prelude to the much more comprehensive, original and also ambitious undertaking of writing himself a new grammar of Pāli, offering a synthesis of the present state of our knowledge, on the one hand, and of his own opinions, observations and conclusions, on the other.

The result is in my view a big step forward in Pāli philology, and Middle Indo-Aryan philology at the same time. I hope that this new handbook will be well received by all those who already know this language as also by those who wish to learn it and to thus gain access to the marvellous and highly fascinating world of Theravāda Buddhist thought.

Foreword

WILHELM GEIGER's Pāli Literature and Language is truly a monumentum aere perennius – one of the great achievements of Indology. Since its publication in 1916, however, much water has flowed down the Rhine and a great number of scholars have added to our knowledge of Pāli, in particular the 'Northern' school of Pāli philology as represented by e.g. DINES ANDERSEN and HELMER SMITH. And "however valuable as a descriptive grammar and as collection of material ... the Pāli – Literatur und Sprache of Wilhem Geiger ... undoubtedly is, it is far from linguistic in purpose" (LOUIS H. GRAY, BSOS 8 [1935/37] 563). And so the fact that this grammar published so long ago has been "reprinted only slightly modified as a handbook and an introduction for beginners is truly remarkable. This is exactly what happened to GEIGER's Pāli grammar ... when it was republished by the Pāli Text Society as 'A Grammar of Pāli by WILHELM GEIGER, translated into English by BATAKRISHNA GHOSH, revised and edited by K. R. NORMAN'" (VON HINÜBER 1999: 148). This publication should therefore not be regarded as a new Pāli grammar, which is still a desideratum. What a pity HELMER SMITH declined when asked by WILHELM GEIGER to prepare a second edition of his grammar!

When towards the end of 1997 Professor Dr. GEORGE CARDONA asked me to write the chapter on Aśokan Prakrit and Pāli for The Indo-Aryan Languages (ed. by GEORGE CARDONA and DHANESH JAIN) I was obliged to bring together and sift through my Pāli collectanea. During 1998 I prepared a draft Pāli grammar in order to have a solid base for my contribution to CARDONA's and JAIN's handbook (to be published by Curzon Press). Since then I have continually re-worked my Pāli grammar, included references therein to secondary literature covering research done down to the year 2000; and I have prepared extensive indexes. The result now lies before you. But restricted as it is to the language of the canonical Pāli texts – despite some exceptions (e.g. Dīp, Mhv, Mil) – this grammar can be regarded only as a complement to 'Geiger', and like 'Geiger' it lacks a chapter on Pāli syntax. To make a long story short: a new 'Geiger' comprising all stages of Pāli, registering all forms with their references and giving an up-to-date description of the Pāli syntax has yet to be written. That this grammar may prove helpful for such an enterprise, I have taken the step of adding meanings to all words and references if such cannot be found with the help of CPD or PED; and I have appended concordances of the present grammar to 'Geiger' and

VON HINÜBER's Überblick (see p. 356-360) and to RICHARD PISCHEL's Grammatik der Prakrit-Sprachen (see p. 361-380). As the phonological development of Pāli in the main runs strictly parallel to that of the various Prakrits, this Pāli grammar might be of some help for the study of Prakrit as well. And as it is unlikely – to the best of my knowledge – that a new 'Pischel' will be published in the near future, I have decided to include a short summary of the paragraphs of 'Pischel' and to add a number of addenda et corrigenda pertaining to particular problems.

Many thanks for advice and criticism go to my friend Dr. Chlodwig H. Werba, whose keen eye and great expertise spared me many an embarrassment, to Professor Dr. Oscar von Hinüber for numerous and pertinent discussions of individual problems and for loans of books and articles, and to Professor Dr. Lambert Schmithausen for valuable suggestions on an earlier version of this grammar. Professors Dr. Nalini Balbir and Dr. Junko Sakamoto-Goto, though not directly involved in this project, were over the years always helpful when I consulted them on problems of Middle Indo-Aryan grammar and metrics. My thanks are also due to Professor Dr. Colette Caillat for 'kind exhortations' given when I first took up Pāli – and of course for her exemplification of scholarly excellence. Peter Delion, a former student of mine, kindly searched the libraries of Tübingen for many an article not available in Freiburg, and Professors Dr. Saroja Bhate, Dr. S. D. Laddu (both Poona) and the late Dr. H. C. Bhayani (Ahmedabad) were kind enough to forward copies of articles not (readily) available in Europe. My sincerest thanks go to Dr. Anne MacDonald for having vetted my English – this despite much pressure of work – and to Jörn Peter Michels, a student of mine here in Freiburg, for having checked most of the text references. Naturally I alone am responsible for any remaining errors. I trust only they will not prove numerous. Not least I wish to thank Professors Dr. Albrecht Wezler and Dr. Michael Witzel for accepting this Pāli grammar for their series Indian Philology and South Asian Studies – and the former for kindly writing the preface – and the Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft for awarding a Heisenberg Stipendium (1994 - 2000) which enabled me to pursue my researches.

1. Introduction

§ 1. Pāli and the Middle Indo-Aryan languages

Pāli is the language of the texts of the Theravādins, an ancient school of Hīnayāna Buddhism. The Theravāda tradition has always claimed that the language the Buddha spoke was Māgadhī – i.e. an eastern language – and that this language was the same as that of its canonical texts, a language now called Pāli (a designation which originally meant ‘text’ and whose use as the name of a particular language seems not to antedate the 18th century¹). And indeed we might expect that the language early Buddhism made use of was essentially an eastern one, current in the Gangetic basin in the 5th century B.C.² Pāli, however, as we have it, is basically a language of western India, as the edicts of Aśoka clearly show. Some of its salient features it shares with the western edicts (especially that of Gīrnār), e.g.

the retention of both r and l (see § 14.10; Aś G karoti, rāja(n)-, likhita-, sīla-), the distinction of palatal, dental and cerebral nasal (see § 13; Aś G p(r)āṇa-, ñātika-, Tambapaṇṇi, añña-, maṇṇate), -cch- < -kṣ- (see § 18.2; Aś G vra[c]cha-), the assimilation of consonant clusters (see § 16.1; Aś G rā[ñ]ño, āra[b]bhare, Brahmagiri a[y]ya-)³, the non-cerebralisation of t(h) following r/r (see § 14.5; Aś G a[t]thāya, kata-), the nominative sg. of the masculine a-stems in -o, that of the neuter in -am (see § 30.1; Aś G piyo –

But sporadically it presents features that belong to the eastern part of the linguistic area of India¹, as evidenced by the Asoka edicts of (e.g.) Kālsī, Dhauḷi and of all pillars², e.g.

the substitution of l for r (see § 14.10; As K kaleti, lāja(n)-), the merger of the palatal, dental and cerebral nasal into the dental one (see § 16.3; As K pāna-, nātik[y]a-, Taṃbapaṃni, aṃna-, mannati)³, -kkh- < -kṣ- (see § 18.2; As K lu[k]kha-), the anaptyctical splitting of conjuncts (see § 21; As lājine, alabhiyaṃti, Bairāṭ aliya-)⁴, the cerebralisation of t(h) following r/r (see § 14.5; As K aṭhāya, kaṭa-)⁵, the nominative sg. of the masculine and neuter a-stems in -e (see § 30.1/10; As K °piye – dāne, mule), the locative of the masc./ntr. a-stems in -asi (see § 30.4; As K vijitasi, dhamma-

Many Pāli words and forms – "with 'frozen' phonetics", as RICHARD GOMBRICH aptly characterised them (in: GEIGER 1994: XXVII) – are relics from an earlier eastern dialect in which the 'texts' of early Buddhism were (orally) handed down. This proto-canonical language (which HEINRICH LÜDERS called *Alt-Ardhamāgadhi*⁷) – akin to the administrative language of the Maurya king Aśoka (268-232 B.C.) and based on an artistic MIA ‘Dichtersprache’ which was in use long before the time of the Buddha – was in many ways, when compared with OIA, further advanced than the western dialects of its time¹: Internal voiced occlusives had been lost, while the surds were voiced (-p- to -v-), original initial y- had (at least in some words) already become *j-*², and the gender distinction was about to break down (etc.). That meant that the ‘texts’ were transformed into a more archaic language (unless the words were taken over unaltered) as Buddhism spread westward³. And that process over-reached itself in not a few instances, i.e. hyper-forms like Isipātana (*Rśyavrjana)⁴ were created (see § 12 rem. f., 14.4/10, 16.9). In that way Pāli originated as a mixture of different dialects, as a kind of lingua franca (see VON HINÜBER § 39). From the west of mainland India, where the Buddhist communities using Pāli as their sacred language settled, the ‘texts’ were brought to Ceylon during the reign of Aśoka. In the monasteries of that island they were handed down orally until they were committed to writing during the council of Mātālē, held under the auspices of king Vaṭṭagāmaṇi Abhaya (27-19 B.C.)⁵. The main part in the tradition of the Tripiṭaka and its commentaries¹ was played by the Mahāvihāra of Anurādhapura (for which a peculiar – though faulty – pronunciation [-c- ~ -j-, -t- ~ -d-, -p- ~ -v-, -k- ~ -y-] is recorded; cf. § 14.2 rem. a)²; this fundament of the Theravāda school was so dominant that another Pāli tradition independent of it is now documentable only in traces³. The Pāli of the ‘Mahāvihāra’-texts has phonetic features which it shares with no other form of MIA and which strongly suggest Sanskritisation (see § 3.2, 16.9 rem. a, 18.3 rem.)⁴. This is the result of the great influence Sanskrit exercised on Pāli, notably in the 12th century when the texts were revised on the basis of (the Burmese) Pāli grammars (e.g. the Saddanīti) which were heavily influenced by the works of Pāṇini and other Sanskrit grammarians⁵.

⁵ In its vocabulary, Pāli is mostly dependent on Vedic and Sanskrit. And the portion of words borrowed – or reborrowed (raṇa- ‘wound’ < Tamil iraṇam < Skt. vraṇa- [see BARNETT, JRAS 1925, 187 n. 1]) – from non-Aryan language families such as Dravidian or Austro-Asiatic is not greater than in Sanskrit: Some loan-words found in Sanskrit are unknown to Pāli and vice versa (e.g. ²*aṭṭa*- ‘law-suit’ [see p. 111], cāṭi- ‘vessel’ [CDIAL 4736], cumbaṭa- ‘pad of cloth’ [CDIAL 4869], piṅka- ‘sprout’ [Sadd V 1606], māla-/māla- ‘[some sort of] building’ [see KIEFFER-PÜLZ, Centenaire de Louis Renou. Paris 1996, 285-325], velli- ‘silver’ [see KATRE, Calcutta Oriental Journal 1 (1934) 221-223]). And like Sanskrit Pāli knows some (originally) Greek words (suruṅga- ‘underground passage’ [see OBERLIES 1993: 165], horā-

Pāli as a MIA language is different from Sanskrit not so much with regard to the time of its origin than as to its dialectal base, since a number of its morphonological and lexical features betray the fact that it is not a direct continuation of Ṛgvedic Sanskrit; rather it descends from a dialect (or a number of dialects) which was (/were), despite many similarities, different from Ṛgvedic¹. Some examples may help to illustrate this point²: (1) (ug-/pag)gharati ‘oozes’ points back to a form ḡg^harati* (from PII √g^har*, see Avestan √γžar) which reflects the voiced cluster of PIE √d^hg^{uh}er* ‘to flow, move forcefully’ as against Vedic kṣárati and Greek φθείρω; (2) we meet with the same difference of voiced and surd consonant in ¹jhāyati ‘burns, is on fire’ (and jhāna- ‘fire’, jhāpaka- ‘incendiary’, jhāpana- ‘setting on fire’, jhāpeti ‘sets on fire’, jhāma- ‘on fire’) and ¹ghāyati ‘is burnt, is tormented’, on the one hand, and OIA √kṣā on the other, continuations of PIE √d^hg^{uh}eH*; (3) (anupa/ano/uj)jagghati ‘laughs at’ – as well as the Ṛgvedic hapax jájhjhatī- ‘laughing’ (5.52.6) – is a dialectal variant from Indo-Iranian j^hag^hati* as against RV(+) jakṣa ° (< j^ha-g^hs-a* °)³.

This base dialect (or dialects) of Pāli was (/were) in several points more archaic than Ṛgvedic Sanskrit: (1) (i)dha ‘here’⁴ (see p. 91) directly continues – other than R̥gvedic ihá – PIE *^o*dʰe* (see Greek ἔνεργε)¹, and (2) kiṇāti ‘buys’ has preserved – other than R̥gvedic krīṇāti (with the -ī- from krītá- < kʷrih₂tó-*) – the original short -ī- of the present stem kʷrinéh₂-*. One of the dialects on which Pāli rests seems to have had affinities with the language of the holy texts of Zarathustrism, the Avesta: (1) nhāru- ‘sinew’ (< snārut-* < snāurt-*) agrees with Avestan snāuuarə against Vedic (AV+) *snāvan-*²; (2) (a)sāta- ‘(mis)fortune, (un)pleasant’³ is a continuation of sāta-, which belongs to PII čjātá- (< PIE kʷieh₂tó-* [see Latin quietus]). Since (OIA) cyāta-* and (Pāli) cāta-* are to be expected, Yāska’s and Patañjali’s records, that the Kambojas of eastern Iran had a word śavati ‘to go’ (Nirukta II 2, Mahābhāṣya I 9,25-26) which answers to Avestan š(ii)auua(itē) and not to the OIA pendant cyāva(ti), is of particular interest⁴.

‘hour’). See also § 5 rem. d.

¹ But as in Ṛgvedic intervocalic -d(h)- is represented by -(h)- (see BLOCH 1965: 57).

Pāli is by no means younger than (‘classical’) Sanskrit as archaisms prove⁵: (1) The endings of the nom. and instr. pl. m. and ntr. of the a-stems (āse/āso*, ā* and ehi*) and of the acc. sg. of the ī-stems (iyam*) continue

It is most difficult to decide whether the greater frequency of the ending °are in Pāli (dicchare, udicchare) as compared with Sanskrit is a relic from Vedic times (see VON HINÜBER § 425) or only a secondary extension (note Pāli -are vs. Vedic -ire [!]). What we can say is that it is a 'western' feature (see p. 219).

Thus the anaptyctic vowels (see § 21) – to give just one example – often do not count as far as the metre is concerned². We even have to assume that there was something like an ‘orthographical reform’ (see OBERLIES 1996: 94). behind the wording as handed down to us if we are to arrive at the old forms. This can be achieved by a strict philological interpretation of the texts; in this respect the use of metrical criteria has proved especially helpful¹.

¹ See ALSDORF (1968), BECHERT (1961) and CAILLAT (1970). OBERLIES (1993/94, 1995/96) is a conspectus metrorum of the Pāli texts to be supplemented by Sadd IV 8 (p. 1148-1172) and NORMAN (1992a: 45-59, 1994: 119-131).

There are, indeed, differing views about the value of metre for the restoration of a(n apparently) corrupt text. BROUGH (1962: 194) pointed out that "there is no reason to suppose that the compilers of the Pali canon were particularly sensitive to metrical minutiae", whereas KÖLVER maintained – though with reference to (Buddhist Hybrid) Sanskrit – that "for the vast majority of metres, a deviation from prescribed quantities is a downright mistake, and a rare one at that: I have always admired Edgerton for giving this principle its due weight and using it as a tool for textual criticism in Buddhist Hybrid Sanskrit" (in: Sauhydayamaṅgalam. Studies in Honour of Siegfried Lienhard Stockholm 1995, 192).

2. Phonology

2.1. Vowel quantity, word finals and word rhythm

§ 3. 1. The vowel system of Pāli consists of the following sounds: a, ā, i, ī, u, ū, e and o (see Sadd IV 1.1.2)¹. Compared with OIA/Sanskrit, Pāli has lost the vowels (a) r, ṛ, l and the diphthongs (b) ai and (c) au which were replaced by (a) a, i, u, (b) i, e and (c) u, o (see § 5, 7, 9, 11-12)². It gained, however, an ‘umlaut’ -aĩ- (written -āĩ- or -e-), medially due to the metathesis of -ar(i)y- and -ah(i)y- (see § 22.3), in sandhi due to the contact of -ā and *ĩ*³. – 2. Due to the law of *mora*⁴, which rules that a syllable must not contain more than two morae (one mora [mātrā] is the length of time of a short vowel or of two consonants⁵), the OIA long vowels – as such count also a short vowel plus anusvāra (aṃ, iṃ, uṃ)⁶, even if a vowel

³ See CPD, Epilegomena 23* (s.v. diphth.), VON HINÜBER § 147-150 and OBERLIES (1995/96: 270).

This sound is to be distinguished from that -ai- which is retained in some Prakrit words (on which see PISCHEL § 61-61^a).

⁴ See GEIGER § 5 and VON HINÜBER § 108-109. For Prakrit see PISCHEL § 83-84 and JACOBI § 11.

⁵ See Sadd IV 1.1.2 and 1.1.3.

vowels (sānūnāsika [see Sadd IV 1.1.2]), i.e. between aṃ, iṃ, uṃ on the one hand and aṁ, iṁ, uṁ on the other. (In defiance of the mss.) the former should be reserved for long syllables, the latter (in case a consonant follows) for short (see EDGERTON, JAOS 66 [1946] 199 [§ 19] and 202 [§ 50], SMITH 1950: 3 and BECHERT 1961: 19; cf. PISCHEL § 178-179) while before a vowel -Vm should be used if the syllable is metrically short (see § 24 rem. [p. 121]). As the different scripts of the Pāli textual tradition have no sign for ṁ there is some confusion in the PTS text editions between final -ṃ and final -ṁ before consonants – as well as between -Vm V- and -Vm V- (see also § 4.1).

sīsa(ka)- ‘head’ (śīrṣan- / śīrṣaka-), (anāva)sūraṃ ‘(as long as) the sun (does not set)’ ([adv.] anavasūryam*)¹, dīgha- ‘long’ (dirgha-), ([a]hattha)pāsa- ‘side (of the hand [loc. = nearby])’ (°pārśva-)², siṅgha- ‘swift’ (śiṅgha-), lākhā- ‘lac, red dye’ (lākṣā-), apekhā- ‘regard, longing for’ (apekṣā-), vimokha- ‘release’ (vimokṣa-), paliveṭheti ‘wraps up’ (°veṣṭayati), heṭheti ‘injures’ (heṣṭati*)³, (a)sekha- ‘(not) to be trained’ ([a]śaikṣa-)⁴. In this way Pāli gets doublets such as ummī-/ūmī- ‘wave’ (ūrmi-) or ¹*patta-/pātī-* ‘bowl’ (pātra-/ī-)⁵ which occasionally give rise to unetymological quantitative metathesis (see 3 below). The shortening due to the law of mora even occurs when the geminate consonant is split by a vowel⁶ (apilapati ‘floats’ < āplavate, ācariya- ‘teacher’ < ācārya-, iriyā- ‘behaviour’ < īryā-, bhariyā- ‘wife’ < *bhāryā-*⁷, sukhuma- ‘minute, fine’ < sūkṣma- [see § 17]), but not so in (e.g.) rājīnā ‘by the king’ (rājñā) and Sākiya (Śākya). JOHANSSON, Monde Oriental 2 (1907/08) 106-107, explained svātānāya 'on the following day' not as derived from śvāstanāya (pace GEIGER § 6 n.) but as formed analogical to purātana-, sanātana- and other such words.

- ¹ On this word see § 16.7. The same metathesis quantitatum is assumed by the PED for saṃkāpeti, Vin I 137,12 (saṃkalpayati).
- ² Differently on this word TURNER, who maintains that compensatory lengthening of a vowel followed by -ss- does not occur in Pāli (proper) (1975: 421-422; cf. ibid. 405-406 n. 8).
- ³ On hāsa- 'joy', Dh 146, (probably) from (OIA) harṣa- see BROUGH (1962: 217).
- ⁴ On this word (Ja V 399,7*, Sn 428) and on +jūha(n)ti 'they sacrifice' (Sn 1046 [cf. SAKAMOTO-GOTO 1987/88: 357 and NORMAN 1992: 369]) see TURNER (1975: 429).
- ⁵ See CHARPENTIER, IL 2 (1932) 48-49.
- ⁶ In: daṭṭhaviṣa-, Mil 150,8/11 (see TRENCKNER's note ad loc.). As to the shortening of the final ā cf. dāṭṭhabala-, Ja II 409,15*, and dāṭṭhabali(n)-, Sn 72 (see OBERLIES 1995: 138).

vihesā- 'injury, annoyance', M I 510,34, Sn 247, and vihesati 'injures, insults', Ud 44,30, 45,8, however, seem to be remodellings of vihiṃsā- and vihiṃsati after viheṭh^o (and not – pace GEIGER § 10 – their direct continuations).

⁹ vācanaṃ, Ja I 295,12*, should be corrected to vañcanaṃ 'deception' (corr. = Ja V 448,30*); see OBERLIES (1995/96: 289).

Of a completely different kind – despite THIEME, Kleine Schriften p. 711 – is the -ṃ- of (e.g.) siṅgāla- 'jackal' (śṛgāla-) and sumsumāra- 'dolphin; crocodile' (a continuation of RV śīmśumāra-) – the latter probably due to 'regressive infiltration' of the following -m- (see THIEME, l.c.).

rem. ad 2. The different way of splitting up \sqrt{CC} -syllables was one of the metrical licences the poetic language made use of⁴. Thus, one and the same OIA word may appear in different guises (see WARDER 1967: 32-36): suriyo 'sun' (--), Ja VI 201,25*⁵, Th 477, Sn 687, suriyamhi (√x), Ja VI 136,4* (Āryā), IV 61,1*, VI 263,12* (both Vait.), (canda)sūriye, Ja IV 61,8* (Vait.)⁶; ad 4. TURNER restricts compensatory lengthening to vowels followed by m+h/r/S; all other cases are explained as due to analogy or replacement of a simple noun by its vrddhi-derivative (1975: 405-406 n. 8; cf. ibid. 421-429); ad 5. The Ceylonese scribes tended to write 'unetymological' nasality: naṃgara- 'town' (~ nagara-), Ap 34,18, 61,10 (the readings

If GEIGER's explanation (§ 184) were correct, siṃsati 'moves', Vv 1015-1016, 1181 ([si]sīrṣati [√sṛ]) would belong here. But it seems to mean 'neighs' (see CPD s.v. abhisīṃsati), and hence another derivation is called for (CPD l.c. points to "hasati, hīṃsati or hesati, sa. √h(r)eṣ" what I fail to understand).

§ 4. 1. Except for -(V)m and -(V)n, which both resulted in -(V)m̃ (for the metrical value of -Vṃ≠ see § 3.2 with p. 17 n. 6)³, Pāli has lost all final consonants unless they were retained in sandhi clusters (see § 25)⁴. But due to analogies even -ṃ is dropped, in (e.g.) āyasmā ‘venerable one’ (āyasmān) and vidvā ‘wise’ (vidvān) after rājā ‘king’⁵, in tunhī ‘silently’ (tūṣṇīm) after cvi-forms⁶ and in (i)dāni ‘now’ (idānīm) after temporal adverbs like kadāci ‘at some time or another’ (kadācit) or sampati ‘just, now’ (saṃprati). Due to strong metrical pressure -Vṃ was shortened to -Vṃ̃, i.e. a short nasalised vowel (nāhesuṃ bhante ˊˊˊ, Pv 98, alatthaṃ bhante ˊˊˊ, Pv 566, tathāhaṃ ˊˊˊ, Pv 554, pāpuṇiṃ cetaso ˊˊˊ, Thī 91), and the nasality of the vowel became so feebly pronounced that it could be lost completely⁷ (note the fact that there was no sign to denote such a short nasal vowel⁸): aṭṭhāna ‘[it is an] impossibility’, Sn 54, dīgham addhāna front; formerly' (puraḥ)¹, s(u)ve 'tomorrow' (śvaḥ)². After vowels other than °a- the visarga is entirely lost (jāti 'births' < jātiḥ). – 3. Hence all words end in (short or long) vowels or else (due to the law of mora) in short vowels plus -ṁ/ṁ̃ (see p. 17 n. 6): puttā 'sons' (putrāḥ), kaññā 'girls' (kanyāḥ), aggi 'fire' (agniḥ), bhikkhu 'monk' (bhikṣuḥ), dhī 'shame on' (dhik), Assaji (°jit), assā 'from the horse' (aśvāt), samantā 'on all sides' (samantāt), kaññam 'girl' (kanyām), mayham 'me, my' (mahyam). – 4. A long final vowel became shortened in polysyllabic words if the penultimate syllable was long whereas long finals remained in disyllabic words as well as in polysyllabic words possessing a short penult: kaññāya 'of the girl' (kanyāyāḥ), tassā 'her' (tasyāḥ), deviyā 'of the queen' (deviyāḥ), sīlavatā 'by the virtuous' (sīlavatā), abravī 'he said' (abravīt), atāri 'he crossed' (atārīt). This accounts also for the sporadic absolutes in -tva (see § 58). But possible unique forms, which this rhythmic law would have produced within a paradigm, were eliminated, e.g. nattāro 'grandsons' (naptāraḥ) and sakhāro 'friends' (see § 33) on the model of pitaro 'fathers' (pitarāḥ); and a number of levellings (e.g. due to the frequent use of augment and preverb) affected this rule also in the verbal inflection. At some stage this rule ceased to operate; subsequently, new forms were created and redactional modernisations removed the old ones (see INSLEER 1994). That is the reason why the opposition of brevity and length seems to be neutralised in final vowels (see VON HINÜBER § 168 and BLOCH 1965: 229). – 5. Final vowels may be 'nasalised' even after loss of a following

¹ Cf., however, Sadd V 1620 s.v. pure ('pure ≠ puraḥ x agge'), BERGER (1955: 15 n. 5) and BECHERT (1980: 30-31).

2.2. The vowels

§ 5. P. a generally goes back to OIA(1) a, to ā (2a) followed by one (see § 3.3 and § 5.4 [below]) or (2b) more than one consonant (see § 3.2), (2c) at the seam of a compound or at morpheme boundaries¹ or (2d) in word-final position, particularly in polysyllabic words whose penultimate is long (see § 4.4), and (3) (normally) to context-free r (i.e. not preceded or followed by a palatal or labial; see § 7.3 and 9.3)²:

For -a < -ā in adverbs in Prakrit see PISCHEL § 113.

Obviously, yathā and (i)va influenced each other so that the final of the one was lengthened (vā [see p. 28 n. 5]) and that of the other one was shortened (yatha).

⁴ This absolutive is probably influenced by gahetvā ‘having grasped’ (cf. CPD s.v. ajjhogāhati).

⁵ On this meaning of nijjhapayati see LÜDERS, Philologica Indica p. 307. On the -a- cf. LEUMANN (1940: 226-227 [= Kleine Schriften p. 319-320]).

DHADPHALE, PAIOC Thirtieth Session. Poona 1982, p. 65). Is Pāli (°)khata- ‘dug’ (parikkhatā ca sā bhūmi, Ja II 242,11*, palikhata-, S IV 83,5* [cf. Sadd V 1578]) – besides (°)khāta- – due to a similar confusion of two verbs – viz. khata- ‘hurt’ (kṣa-ta-) and khāta- ‘dug’ (khāta-)? The geminate of (pari)kkh(atā) seems to confirm this presumption (cf. OBERLIES 1993: 59 [s.v. khaiya-]).

bimbū[d]hāna-* ← bimbopadhāna-)¹. (5) -i- between -r- and a cerebral is lowered to -a- (see BERGER 1955: 38, 54): khīraṇikā- ‘milk-giving cow’ (kṣīriṇikā-*), gharaṇī- ‘mater familias’ (ghariṇī-* [cf. Skt. grhiṇī-]), poṅkharāṇī- ‘lotus pond’ (puṣkariṇī-). In the vicinity of palatals (c, j, ñ, y, l, h) the palatal colouring of the vowels ī ū was only optionally expressed in writing (i.e. as ī or e); instead (6) the vowel a was used²: ānañja- ‘imperturbability’ (āniñjya-*), Koṇḍaṇña (Kaṇḍinya), kolaṇña- ‘born in a (good) family’ (kaulīnya-), kosajja- ‘idleness’ (kausīdya-), porohacca- ‘office of family priest’ (paurohitya-*)³, Mucalinda (Mucilinda)⁴, sākhalya- ‘friendship’ (: sakhila-)⁵, āyasma(nt)- ‘venerable’ (āyusmant-), bāhusacca- ‘profound knowledge’ (bāhuśrutya-). As a result of (7) assimilation⁶ and (8) dissimilation/differentiation⁷, a develops from ī and *ū*⁸:

⁸ One of the rare cases of e__e-dissimilation is meraya- ‘liquor’ (< mereya-* < madireya-*): CHARPENTIER ad Utt XXXIV 14. On this word see WACKERNAGEL, Kleine Schriften p. 1487, and VON HINÜBER § 170.

(8) tad-aminā ‘by this’ (iminā), Sn 137², dakkhita- ‘consecrated’ (dikṣita-), garu- ‘heavy’ (guru-)³, makula- ‘bud’ (mukula-).

As a (9) split vowel a appears between two consonants (at least) one of which contains an ā (see § 21)⁴: garahati ‘reproaches’ (garhati), palavati ‘floats, swims’ (plavate)⁵, ratana- ‘gem, jewel’ (ratna-), nahāpeti ‘washes’ (snāpayati), pāsaṇī(ka)- ‘heel’ (pārṣṇi-), D III 150,22* (so read⁶). It functions as (10) prothetic vowel in the emphatic particle assu(dam) (< sudam < sma tam) originally abstracted from sandhi collocations such as tayas-su (see § 24, end).

rem. (a) The rules governing the substitution of OIA r are interfered with by numerous analogies (see VON HINÜBER § 123). And due to semantic differentiation r can be represented in two different ways in one and the same OIA word (see BERGER 1955: 40 / 55 and VON HINÜBER § 124):

² See GEIGER § 25.3 and SAKAMOTO-GOTO (1987/88: 356). The same contamination is to be met with in Prakrit (see PISCHEL § 129).

³ See OBERLIES (1995a: 149). For the Prakrit word see PISCHEL § 91 (with a wrong explanation).

⁵ See EDGERTON, JAOS 75 (1955) 63 (cf. SMITH 1950: 33, BERGER 1955: 61, SAKAMOTO-GOTO 1988: 92). LÜDERS (1954: 137-138) regards (dut/tat)īya- as a peculiarity of the ‘eastern’ language (cf. VON HINÜBER § 411 [2.]).

⁶ See GEIGER § 16c /17d and THIEME, Kleine Schriften p. 976, for Prakrit PISCHEL § 102.

dissimilated to *i*__*u*¹: (9) timissā ~ timīsikā ‘darkness’ (tamisrā)², siriṃsapa- ‘snake’ (sarīsṛpa-)³, (10) purisa- ‘man’ (puruṣa-)⁴. (11) a and – though to a lesser degree – ū had a tendency to become palatalised to i in the vicinity of palatal sounds⁵: āsiṃsati ‘hopes for’ (āśaṃsati)⁶, dighañña-

¹ See GEIGER § 19.3 and LÜDERS (1954: 38), for Prakrit see PISCHEL § 124.

² Also timisā- is attested (D II 175,17, III 85,5, M III 174,26, S V 442,25). It seems to go back to tamiṣā-*, a blending of tamisrā- and tamas- (cf. Pkt. tamiṣā- ~ tamissā- [see PSM s.v., PISCHEL § 315]). Somewhat differently NORMAN (1992: 272 [ad Sn 669]).

³ nisinna- ‘sitting’ (≠ niṣanna-) shows the /i/ of the present nisīdati (see Sadd V 1508).

⁴ On such u_u_a > u_i_a-dissimilations see LÜDERS (1954: 37-38), as to Prakrit see PISCHEL § 124.

muditā- (allegedly) “abstr. fr. mudu, for the usual mudutā” does not belong here (pace GEIGER § 19.3 and PED s.v. muditā). EDGERTON, JAOS 73 (1953) 118, rightly emphasizes that “it is at least very doubtful whether Pali ... muditā ... has anything to do with Skt. mṛdu; it means ‘joy’ ... and is standardly associated with forms of the Skt. root mud”. That means: mudutā- (< mṛdūtā-) is an altogether different word.

‘low, last’ (jaghanya-), miñjā- ‘marrow’ (majjan-/°ā-), tissā ‘her’ (tasyāḥ), rajassira- ‘dirty, polluted’ (*rajassila- < rajasvala-)¹, samijjhittā- ‘ordered’ (~ ajjhittā-), Ja VI 12,25*, jigucchati ‘is disgusted, detests’ (jugupsate)², vālikā- ‘sand’ (vālukā-)³, bhiyyo ~ bhīyo ‘more’ (bhūyāḥ)⁴. It resulted (12) by (so-called) *saṃprasāraṇa*⁵ from (C)ya in open and closed syllables (> *(C)yi > (CC)i)⁶, a process partly favoured by analogies⁷ and folk-

¹ On this word (which has a doublet rajissara-, Dh-p-a III 231,21, 233,3) see CHARPENTIER, IL 2 (1932) 57-60, and ALSDORF, Kleine Schriften p. 289-290.

² According to BERGER (1955: 52) jigucchati has its i from desideratives like jighacchati ‘desires to eat’ and *pipāsati ‘desires to drink’. And it is also quite possible that the pre-form of jigucchati was jigupsate*, as was pointed out by BIRWÉ, ZDMG 109 (1959) 223-224 (cf. CHARPENTIER, Die Desiderativbildungen der indoiranischen Sprachen. Uppsala 1912, 45 n. 2, and BURROW, The Sanskrit Language. London 1955, p. 46). Given that one of these explanations is right the above example should be cancelled.

⁴ (Μενάινδρος >) Melanda* > Milinda seems to be influenced by inda- < indra- (see TRECKNER 1908: 104).

⁵ On this term see BECHERT (1958: 314-315 n. 1) and SAKAMOTO-GOTO (1988: 88). For saṃprasāraṇa in Pāli see GEIGER § 25 (cf. ibid. § 19.1) and VON HINÜBER § 129-133. For Prakrit see PISCHEL § 151-155.

⁶ See SAKAMOTO-GOTO (1988: 88).

⁷ majjhima- was grouped with the ‘quasi-ordinals’ antima- ‘final, lowest’ and pacchim(ak)a- ‘last; western’ (cf. abbhantarima- ‘interior’, Ja V 38,12, uparima- ‘high[est]’, D III 180,16, orima- ‘near’, A II 50,26, bāhirima- ‘outer’, Ja V 38,14, Vin III 149,29, hetṭhima- ‘lower, lowest’, S V 452,13 [cf. AiGr. II,2 § 226aβ]). On etymologies: abbhihāsi ‘offered’ (abhyahārṣīt), kāhiti ‘will make’ (~ karīṣyati, see § 49), nigrodha- ‘banyan tree’ (nyagrodha-), majjhima- ‘middle’ (madhyama-)¹, sakkhi- ‘friendship’ (sakhya-). This vowel functions as (13) a svarabhakti sound (see § 21) between two consonants (a) one of which has a palatal colouring – (b) unconditioned -i- is an eastern feature² – and also (14) as a prothetic vowel³: (13a) aggini- ‘fire’ (agni-, [see § 21]), agghiya- ‘respectful oblation to a guest’ (arghya-), kiloma- ‘bile’ (kloman-)⁴, kilanta- ‘tired’ (klānta-), gilāna- ‘sick’ (glāna-), pilakkha- ‘fruit of the plakṣa tree’ (plakṣa-)⁵, maryādā- ‘boundary’ (maryādā-), rājinā ‘by the king’ (rājñā), siliṭṭha- ‘adhering’ (śliṣṭa-), (13b) tasiṇā- ‘thirst’ (tṛṣṇā-), (14) itthī- ‘woman’ (strī- [> thī-, Sn 769, Ja I 295,8*, V 81,16*]).

 (4) (issara)kutta- ‘work (of a creator)’ ([°]k|pta-)
 (5) puñchati ‘wipes off’ (proñchati), (a)manuñña- ‘(dis)agreeable, (un)pleasant’ ([a]manojña-), avasucchati ‘will become dry’ (avaśokṣyati)³, sussam ‘I shall hear’ (śroṣy[āmi])⁴
 (6) uññā- ‘contempt’ (avajñā-), ujjhāyati ‘becomes indignant, complains’ (avadhyāyati)⁵, ussāva- ‘dew’ (avaśyāya-)⁶, ukkāra- ‘excrements’ (: avakkāra- [← avaskara-]), uggharati ‘oozes’ (ava-√ghṛ), uttarati ‘descends’ (: otarati [avatarati])
 (7) muñja- ‘made of muñja grass’ (mauñja-), muṇḍiya- ‘baldness’ (mauṇḍya-).

Due to analogy/blending it corresponds to (8) ū, (9) o and (10) au:

² Here would belong bhukuṭi- ‘frown’, Ja V 296,1* (so read: OBERLIES 1993/94: 168) if actually < bhṛkuṭi-. On apāruta- ‘open’ (apāvṛta-) and rukkha- ‘tree’ (~ mālāvaccha- [cf. CPD s.vv. apāruta- / arañña-). rakkha-, Ja III 144,15*, seems to be a wrong reading of Ee (FRANKE, Literarisches Zentralblatt 1917, p. 1040, PED s.v. rakkhā [note], BERGER l.c. 74 and VON HINÜBER l.c.; diff. NORMAN 1992a: 265-266).

³ On -cch- < -kṣy- see § 17 and 18.2.

⁴ Pāli has (a)kuṭūhala- ‘(free from) superstitious regards’ beside kotūhala- as has Skt. kuṭūhala- beside kautūhala-.

(8) luta- ‘cut off’ (lūta* / lūna :: lunāti)¹

(9) tutta- ‘goad’ (tottra- :: tudati)²

(10) agghihutta- ‘oblation to the fire’ (agnihotra- :: huta-), juṇhā- ‘moon-light, the bright fortnight of the month’ (joṇhā-* [jyotsnā-] :: juti- [dyuti-]), paputta- ‘grandson’ (prapautra- :: putra-)³.

It may go back (by ass/dissimilation) to (11) a, (12) āCC or (13) i, preceded or followed by a labial (incl. ũ)⁴:

(11) uḷuṅka- ‘spoon’ (udaṅka- [see p. 88]), navuti- ‘ninety’ (navati-), brahmuno ‘of the brahmin’ (brahmaṇaḥ), (saṃ)muti- ‘(general) opinion’ ([saṃ] mati-)⁵, nimugga- ‘plunged, fallen into’ (nimagna-), anusuyyaka- ‘not envious’ (anasūyaka-), puthujjana- ‘ordinary person’ (puthajjana-* < prthagjana-)⁶, paṇṇuvīsati-

² a(saṃ)kuppa- ‘immovable’ does not go back to kopya-* (pace GEIGER § 15.3) but to kupya-* (see BERGER 1955: 63).

³ See BERGER (1955: 64–65). khudda- ‘honey’ is not a continuation of kṣaudra- (pace GEIGER § 15.4) but of kṣudra- (see FALK, Comparative-Historical Linguistics: Indo-European and Finno-Ugric. Edited by B. BROGYANYI and R. LIPP. Amsterdam 1993, 215–216 n. 20, and NORMAN, JPTS 20 [1994] 220–221).

⁴ See GEIGER § 16a/b, 17a, 18.1, 19.2, TRENCKNER (1908: 128–129) and BERGER (1955: 52 / 60). For Prakrit see PISCHEL § 104 / 117 / 177 and BHAYANI (1997: 33–34).

⁵ See BERGER (1955: 60). Diff. TRENCKNER (1908: 107) who derives (saṃ)muti- from smṛti- (cf., however, OLDENBERG, Kleine Schriften p. 1174).

⁶ See EDGERTON, JAOS 73 (1953) 115–116 n. 1. It is, however, possible that puthu° is a blending of prthak° and prthu° (see Sadd V 1616 and BERGER 1955: 53 n. 101). For Prakrit see PISCHEL § 78.

‘twenty-five’ (pañcaviṃśati-)¹

(12) ummujjati ‘understands’ ([ep.] unmārjati)

(13) ucchu- ‘sugar-cane’ (ikṣu-), kukku- ‘particular measure of length’ (kiṣku-), susu- ‘child’ (śiśu-).

Due to saṃprasāraṇa it results from (14) (<(CC)u < *(C)vu <) (C)va and (C)ma(____n) (see § 16.6)²: addhuno ‘of the way’ (adhvanah), khattum ‘-times’ (: °kṛtvah, see § 4.5), turita- ‘quick’ (tvarita-), supina- ‘dream’ (*svupina- < svapna-), susāna- ‘burning-ground’ (*śvaśāna- < śmaśāna-)³. It figures (15) as a split vowel (see § 21) between two syllables of which (at least) one contains a labial⁴: usumā- ‘heat’ (ūṣman-), kurūra- ‘bloody, raw’ (krūra-), sakkuṇāti ‘is able’ (śaknoti), (app)ātuma- ‘(with a small) self, personality’ (ātman-), chadumaṭṭha- ‘veiled’ (chadmastha-), Ja V 142,22* (so read⁵), sukhuma- ‘subtle’ (sūkṣma-), sumarati ‘remembers’

¹ Surely, the analogy of catuvisati (Sn 457) played a role in the development -a- > -u-.

³ The particle su which is often univerted with other words (tayas-su [> assu (see CPD s.v. ⁵*assu*)], tadā-ssu) seems to be based likewise on OIA sma and svid. Such a mingling would account for the fact that beside (s)sa the derivatives (s)su and ³*so* of OIA sma are met with in Pāli (see NORMAN 1969: 168 [ad Th 225]) and that the interrogative particle si (svid) occurs also in the form (s)sa (see NORMAN 1969: 130 [ad Th 37], 1991: 175/181 and 1992 [ad Sn 168]). By the way: OIA svid never develops to si. In the sole example the PED cites (following GEIGER § 22 / 111), Dh-p-a I 91,18 (kaṃ si tvam āvuso uddissa pabbajito), si is the 2nd person of atthi (see FRANKE, Literarisches Zentralblatt 1917, p. 1063). This phrase is also to be found at Vin I 40,1-2 = 14-15 = 41,11-12, and OLDENBERG prints kaṃ 'si! On sudaṃ (svudaṃ* < smadaṃ* < sma taṃ* < sma tad) see VON HINÜBER § 134.

rem. (a) u is not used as a prothetic vowel. GEIGER’S sole example, umhayati ‘smiles at’ (§ 29), goes back to *ut-smayati*²; (b) Pāli disposed with vṛddhi in derivations from three-syllabic words whose first syllable is closed (see also § 7 rem. a): ussukka- ‘endeavour, zeal’ (utsukya-* [≠ autsukya-])³; (c) kudācanaṃ ‘at any time’ (≠ kadācana) is a new formation based on the stem ku-; (d) Pajjunna as the name of the god of rain seems to be a confusion of Pajjanna*/^o*ñña* (< Parjanya) and Pajjunna* (< Pradyumna)⁴; (e) (^o)hetu ‘because of, for the sake of’ often scans -- and probably stands for hetū* < *hetoh*⁵ as asu ‘that one’ stands for aso < asau (cf., however, kissa hetu with AMg. kassa heuṃ, i.e. hetu ~ hetuṃ [?]); (f) sajju ‘on the same day’, Dh 71⁶, is remodelled from sajjo* (sadyah) after aparajju (aparedyuh) which itself is influenced by ajja ‘today’ (adya)⁷; (g) udāhu ‘or’ (utāho) has its final due to the influence of interrogatives like ādu, kim-u, kiṃ nu or kiṃ su (cf. D I 157,15-16: kiṃ nu kho ... udāhu)⁸; (h) sāluka-

⁶ On this stanza see LÜDERS, Philologica Indica p. 184 with n. 3.

⁷ aparajju ‘on the next day’ has influenced ajjunho ‘this day’ (~ ajjanho [so Be Vin I 25,19*, III 220,29] < adyāhnaḥ*) and tadahū ‘on this day’ (tadaho* < tadahaḥ); see BLOCH, Recueil d’Articles p. 541.

⁸ (e) - (g) pace GEIGER § 22.

‘the edible root of the water-lily’, Vin I 246,16¹, shows a normalisation of the ‘suffix’ ūka-* (Skt. śālūka-)²; (i) āhuneyya- ‘sacrificial, venerable’ < āhonīya-* < āhavanīya- has its -u- from forms like āhuti- (SAKAMOTO-GOTO 1987/88: 357 and VON HINÜBER 1994: 130)³.

§ 10. ū goes back to OIA ū, followed by (1) one, sometimes by (2) two consonants (see § 3.2b):

(1) mūla- ‘root’ (mūla-), ūkā- ‘louse’ (yūkā-)⁴, ahū ‘it was’ (abhūt), Sayambhū (Svayambhūḥ)

(2) ūmī- ‘wave’ (ūrmi-), (deva)tūra- ‘heavenly music’ (tūrya-), pūراتي ‘is filled’ (pūryate), lūkha- ‘rough’ (rūkṣa-).

Due to (3a) *pluti*⁵, (3b) analogical, (3c) rhythmical ([_u|u|_x])⁶ or (3d) compensatory lengthening (see § 3.4) it corresponds to OIA u (in case of 3d to primary and secondary -u[CC]-):

² Cf. AMg. uluga- ‘owl’ < ulūka- (PISCHEL § 78). On the different suffix of geruka- ‘red chalk’ as compared with Skt. gairika- see PISCHEL § 118 and VON HINÜBER § 159.

⁴ On this word – which shows ø < y- – see OBERLIES (1996: 106). For Prakrit see PISCHEL § 335 and ALSDORF, Kleine Schriften p. 826.

(3c) anūdaka- ‘without water’, anūpadhika- ‘free from attachment’, anūpama- ‘incomparable’, Ap 68,21 (so read m.c.), anūpalitta- ‘not clinging to’ (anu^o), nirūdaka- ‘without water’, Ja I 282,3 (niru^o), nirūpadhi- ‘without substratum’ (niru^o)³

Due to (4) analogical levelling it answers to o: (°)rūhati ‘grows’ ([rohati])⁶

² See BARTHOLOMAE, ZDMG 50 (1896) 684-685, BERGER (1955: 56) and OBERLIES (1999: 43). It cannot, however, be ruled out that Pāli has preserved a trace of the original -ṛ-* (see AiGr. I p. XXIII n. 3, § 28 [p. 32] and WACKERNAGEL, Kleine Schriften p. 416 [pace PISCHEL § 126]). But this is certainly not the case (pace PISCHEL § 58) in the gen. pl. -ūnaṃ of the r-stems (see EDGERTON, JAOS 73 [1953] 118).

³ Cf. tadūpika- ‘suitable to that’ (Ja II 160,11*) < tadupiya- (D II 198,17). On this word see TRECKNER (1908: 131-132) and LÜDERS (1954: 78 n. 3).

: rūḥa- = gūhati : gūḥa-)¹. As a preverb it goes back to (5) *ud-(h)*² and (6) *upa*³:

(5) ūhasati ‘bursts out laughing’ (/ud-hasati/), (sam)ūhacca ‘having drawn out’ (/ [sam]ud-hṛtya/), (6) ūsadhi- (upasṛṣṭi-* [see § 16.9]), ūhanati ‘soils’ (← upa-hanti [x ūhadati (~ ohadati)]⁴).

and id. (1996: 109). But see the next foot-note.

¹ See CPD s.v. abhirūhati, BERGER (1955: 47) and SAKAMOTO-GOTO (1987/88: 356). Beside rūhati (and rohati) ruhati is used (sometimes concealed by the ū-form: abhirūha, Thī 378, scans ॐॐ [see CPD s.v.]), and that not only in compounds (pace GEIGER § 133.3): Ap 26,33. It is formed in analogy to aor. (°)ruh- and absol. °ruya. Cf. gūhati ~ guhati (see OBERLIES 1995a: 145 [s.v. paṭigūhati]). It is, however, possible that we have to do with two verbs (‘grows’ and ‘climbs’) which were confused.

² The exact nature of the phonological process (ū-h^o < u-hh*^o < /ud-h^o/ [see § 3.4 and 20] or ū-h^o < uṣ-h*^o [this theory of SMITH, Sadd V 1282, postulates a form of the preverb ud unknown to Vedic Sanskrit]) is a point of some controversy (see the literature cited in the following foot-note).

³ See GEIGER § 28, Sadd V 1282 (s.v. ū), LÜDERS (1954: 95-97), ALSDORF, Kleine Schriften p. 769-775, SAKAMOTO-GOTO (1987/88; 1988: 89; 1991: 21 n. 7) and VON HINÜBER § 282.

⁴ See SAKAMOTO-GOTO (1987/88: 361 / 377-379), for Prakrit see PISCHEL § 327^a. ummihati ‘urinates’ goes back to ud-√mih and not to upa-√mih (SAKAMOTO-GOTO 1987/88 381 n. 25 pace LÜDERS 1954: 95 n. 1).

¹ See Sadd V 1624 (s.v.) and TURNER (1975: 423 [pace GEIGER § 6.2]). This word seems to have developed – over the intermediate stage *pettiya- – to petti- (see § 7 rem. c) which then was crossed with piti- ‘father’ (pitṛ-) yielding petti- ‘father’ (cf. pettika-sambhava-, Ja VI 485,20*, ~ matti-sambhava-, Sn 620): pettighāti(n)- ‘murderer of the father’, Ja V 268,23* (cf. pitighāta-, Ja IV 45,25 [B^d pitū], pitughātaka-, Vin I 88,24), pettivisaya- ‘realm of the deceased (fore-fathers)’, D III 234,8, pettirāja(n)- ‘king of the deceased (fathers)’, Kv 597,1 (cf. [a]petteyya- ‘(not) loving one’s father’ < pitṛiya-, Mahābhāṣya II 340,2). In the same way mattika- (Ja VI 485,20*) was blended with māti- (māṭṛ-) to matti(gha)- ‘mother’, Ja V 269,10* (diff. NORMAN 1993: 77-78, who derives matti- from māṭṛ- through māti*- [as the PED before him]). Or was it a simple confusion of simplex (pitṛ-) and its vrddhi derivation (paitrika*-) which gave rise to the word petti(ka)- (see bhātika-/bhātuka- ‘brother’ p. 136)?

(6) thera- ‘elder’ (sthavira-)², hessati ‘will be’ (bhaviṣyati).

In (7) word final position it corresponds (often due to *u/v*__*o*-dissimilation) to -o < -aḥ (see § 4.2), in (8) medial position due to *o*__*u*-dissimilation to *-o*³. And it goes back to (9) a, followed by a geminate (consonant one of which is a) palatal (incl. l and y)⁴ or to (10) ī before -j- / -y- (secondary -yy-) and (MIA) -l-. Due to (11) analogy or (12) blending it corresponds to *i*⁵:

(7) pure ‘formerly’ (puraḥ), suve ‘tomorrow’ (śvaḥ), jīve ‘living being’ (jīvaḥ), bhikkhave ‘o monks!’ (bhikṣavaḥ)

⁷ -ayū- is retained in mayūkha- ‘ray of light’ (see GEIGER § 27 n. 8 and VON HINÜBER § 145).

In word-final position, it corresponds (also) to (6) -aḥ: asso ‘horse’ (aś-vaḥ), ceto(+) ‘mind’ (cetaḥ[+]), mano(+) ‘mind’ (manaḥ[+]), no ‘our’ (naḥ), ito ‘from here’ (itaḥ), bhikkhavo ‘monks’ (bhikṣavaḥ), rattiyo ‘nights’ (rātr,yaḥ), kudho ‘you were angry’ ([a]krudhaḥ), mā pamādo ‘do not be indolent’ (prāmadah, see § 2)¹. As a preverb it goes back to (ava- [see 4]), (7) apa- and (8) *ut-C*²:

(8) otappati ‘is heated’ (uttapyate), opunāti ‘winnows’ (utpunāti)⁴.

It derives by saṃprasāraṇa from (9) (C)va in closed syllables⁵: sotthi- ‘well-being’ (svasti-), sobbha- ‘hole’ (śvabhra-). Due to metrical re-interpretation, it corresponds to ũ, (10) primary or (11) rhythmically lengthened⁶:

GEIGER § 25.2, SAKAMOTO-GOTO 1991: 20 n. 3), but a hyper-Pāliism for ke ([allegedly (see p. 64, rem. f.) ~ kasmin).

⁶ Long ũ can by no means become o in an open syllable only due to a phonological process. The examples GEIGER (§ 11) adduces are non-Aryan loan-words (see BERGER, Donum Indogermanicum. Festgabe für Anton Scherer. Heidelberg 1971, [where, however, an entry puno is missing and the statement [s.v. puna] that “the form puno is doubtful” is simply wrong; this form is attested Thī 397 and ten times in the Apadāna]).

(14) āmo ‘yes’ (āma :: [voc.] bho, āvuso)¹, dhovati ‘washes’ (dhāvati :: dhota- [< dhauta-])².

We have (15) o for u by wrong resolution of compounds: odaka- ‘water’ ([sīt] odaka-). ⁴ How is līḷhā- ‘facility, skill, grace’ (used in the phrase Buddha-līḷhāya dhammaṃ deseti) to be explained? Is it actually the same word as līlā- ‘play’? COHEN, in: Vidyopāsanā. Studies in Honour of Harivallabh C. Bhayani. Mumbai – Ahmedabad 1999, 37-60, regards both (līlā- < līḷā-* < līḷhā-) as “abstract nouns phonologically equivalent to līḍhā*” (l.c. 55) which is connected with the root lih ‘to lick’.

ḍāka- ‘vegetable’, Thī 1 (for further references see PED s.v.), must be different from śāka- (cf., however, Skt. ḍākinī- ~ śākinī-).

⁷ TURNER (1975: 361) postulates a basic form kṣakṣ-* (cf. Av. xšuuas) whose initial k is abnormally dissimilated (see also AiGr. III § 182d and VON HINÜBER § 399).

⁸ See ALSDORF, Kleine Schriften p. 767 n. 2.

*dviḥṛda- [see § 12.16)]¹, adveḥhaka- ‘not ambiguous’ < *advaiḍhaka- < advaidha[ka]-²) or against a -r-³ (koviḷāra- ~ kuviḷāra- ‘a tree in devaloka’ < kovidāra-)⁴ or due to a contamination (ālāhana- ‘place of cremation’, pariḷāha- ‘fever’ < ādahana- / paridāha- x ḍāha-/ḍahati [see also rem. c]). Words which have -ḷ- < -ṭ- (GEIGER § 38.6) like Āḷavī (Āṭavī), paḷaccari(n)- ‘beggar’, Ja VI 227,23* (cf. paṭaccara-)⁵ and phaḷikā- ‘crystal’ (sphaṭikā-) presuppose intermediate (eastern) -ḍ- (see § 14.2)⁶.

rem. (a) Intervocalic -ḍ- is only very rarely retained: Vidūḍabha, ¹ BURROW, BSOAS 49 (1986) 593, however, derives dohaḷa- from durḥṛd- pointing to Jaiminiya-Brāhmaṇa II 23: tasmād u strī durḥṛdīnī vīva glāyati (v.l. duḥṛdīnī).

² See THIEME, Kleine Schriften p. 976-977 (cf. GEIGER § 42.4); diff. CPD s.v., SMITH, BSL 1929, XVIII, and VON HINÜBER § 10 who derive the word from *advaiḍhā ← *dviḍhā < *dviḍdhā (as against OIA dvidhā [cf. EWAia s.v. dvidhā]).

³ Is the -ḷ- of daḷidda- ‘poor’ (daridra-) and of dāḷiddiya- ‘poverty’ (*dāridrya-) due to a l__d < r__d-dissimilation (see also p. 87)? LÜDERS, Philologica Indica p. 548, however, regards daḷidda- as a wrong form. But -ḷ- seems to be the result if -r- is dissimilated: kaḷīra- ‘sprout’ < karīra-. As to the ‘dental’ nature of r see § 14.14 rem.

⁴ cūḷa- ‘small’ seems to presuppose an intermediate form (cūḍa-* < *)kṣuḍra- < kṣudra- (cf. PISCHEL § 294). On culla- see § 16.7. Most difficult is the explanation of cūḷāsīti- (~ cullāsīti-) ‘eighty-four’. Is it a kind of folk-etymological transformation of corāsīti-* < (*)caurāsīti- < (*)caturāsīti- (cf. Pkt. corāsī- / caurāsī-)?

Burmese manuscripts (of the [sub]commentaries) regularly change the word to sahoḍḍha- (cf. Sadd 71,13 n. a, 781,6 and VON HINÜBER § 198).

² Cf. alāpu- ‘bottle-gourd’ (alābu), Dhṛp 149.

³ See OBERLIES (1996: 103-104).

It is not more than a conjecture that dhopana-, which signifies DI 6,13 not (pace PED s.v. and FRANKE, Dīghanikāya, Göttingen 1913, 9 n. 2) the ‘ceremonial washing of the bones of the dead’ but the ‘rite of the fanning of the urn’ (dhuvana-), was influenced by (OIA) dhūpana- ‘fumigating’.

⁴ It is possible that the base form should be khivati* whose -i- stems from the verbal adjective khivita-* < kṣuvita-* (this explanation I found in TRENCKNER’s Radices Linguae Pālicae).

⁵ See OBERLIES (1996: 103-105).

⁶ See GEIGER § 42.1-2 / 64 and VON HINÜBER § 195 (cf. BLOCH 1965: 58). For Prakrit see JACOBI § 21.4 and PISCHEL § 218-220.

⁷ See also ambāṭaka- ‘wild mango’ (āmṛātaka-).

rem. In some words like āsāṭikā- ‘egg of an insect’ (āsātika-), paṭaṅga- ‘moth’ (pata[n̄]ga-), vaṭaṃsa(ka)- ‘ear-ornament’ (avataṃsa[ka]-) (and phen[ak]a- ‘foam’) the reason for the cerebralisation is unclear (hence called ‘spontaneous cerebralisation’¹).

- 6. In ḍasati ‘bites’ and ḍahati ‘burns’ the cerebral is transferred from the verbal adjectives ḍatta*- (< ḍaṭṭ[h]a*- < daṣṭa-) and ḍaddha*- (a dissimilation from ḍaddha*- < dagdha-)²; see p. 87.
- 7. OIA -n- is sometimes cerebralised after ũ, o, v or a palatal³: abbhuṇṇata- ‘raised, elevated’ (abhyunnata-), oṇata- ‘bent down’ (avanata-), oṇamati ‘bends down’ (avanamati), oṇīta- ‘taken out, removed’ (avanīta-), oṇojeti ‘pours water’ (avanejayati), goṇī- ‘cow’ (goṇī*-)⁴, jaṇṇu(ka)- ‘knee’ (jānu[ka]-)⁵, chakaṇa- ‘dung of animals’ (śaka[n̄a]-), (viñ)ñāṇa- ‘knowledge’ ([vi]jñāna-), pāpuṇāti ‘reaches, attains’ (prāpnoti)⁶, dantaṇa- ‘a piece of wood used for cleaning the teeth’ (°pavana-), lasuṇa- ‘garlic’ (laśuṇa-), vaṇi- ‘wish’ (vani-), sakuṇa- ‘bird’ (śakuṇa-),

³ See CHARPENTIER, Indian Linguistics 2 (1932) 56, and NORMAN (1992: 169-170 [ad Sn 100]). NORMAN, however, restricts this cerebralisation to -n- after a palatal consonant; for [-juṇ-] / [-joṇ-] he gives a different explanation (see 1992: 188 [ad Sn 206]). Cf. also GEIGER § 42.5 and VON HINÜBER § 203-206.

⁴ On goṇaka- ‘blanket’ see LÜDERS, Kleine Schriften p. 447 n. 3.

⁵ GEIGER’s proposal (§ 64.3) to emend to jannuka- is certainly wrong.

⁶ The -n- of Pāli is not more original than the -n- of OIA prāpnoti which is analogical (cf. AiGr. I § 168).

sakkuṇoti ‘is able’ (śaknoti), saṇa- ‘hemp’ (śana-), saṇiṃ ‘gradually’ (śanaiḥ), sobhaṇa- ‘adorning’ (śobhana-), sūṇā- ‘chopping block’ (sūnā-)¹. Conversely, -ṇ- is analogically decerebralised²: dhammena ‘by the doctrine’ (dharmaṇa), sahassāni ‘thousands’ (sahasrāṇi), savaṇa- ‘hearing’ (śravaṇa-), kubbāna- ‘doing’ (kurvāṇa-). The change -n- < -ṇ- may also occur in ‘eastern’ words (cf. Aś G kāraṇa- vs. Kh kālana-)³: bhūnahū- ‘abortionist’ (bhrūṇahan-)⁴.

rem. The cerebral in saṇati ‘rustles, roars’ (~ sanati < svanati) is (most probably) onomatopoeic⁵.

– 8. y is (a) dissimilated to v in the vicinity of a palatal sound⁶ and (b) assimilated to a neighbouring ū: (a) ussāva- ‘dew’ (avaśyāya-), kulāva(ka)- ‘nest’ (kulāya-), Tāvatiṃsa (*Trāyastriṃśat), paṭiviṃsa- ‘share, part’ (patiṇiṃsa-* [see § 7.11] < pratyamśa-), migavā- ‘hunt’ (migayā-* < mṛgayā-)⁷, (iddhi)visavitā- ‘mastery (of magic powers)’ (viṣayitā-*), cf.

– 12. The sporadic correspondence between P. l and OIA *y*⁴ (laṭṭhi- ‘stick, staff’ < yaṣṭi-) points to a *l mouillé*⁵; the (alleged) equivalence of P. y and OIA r is due to analogy (sakhāraṃ, see § 33) or a difference in suffix (vedhavera- ‘son of a widow’ ~ vaidhaveya-, sāmaṇera- ‘novice’ ~ śrāmaṇeya-)⁶. ¹ On the dissimilation of palatals see GEIGER § 41.2 and NORMAN (1992: 356 [ad Sn 968]). LÜDERS (1954: 100-102) regards the depalatalisation of (ʃ)ji- > (ʃ)di- as a feature of the ‘eastern’ language (see also NORMAN, l.c.). For Prakrit see PISCHEL § 215 and SCHWARZSCHILD (1991: 168).

² The next stage is the loss of such a -v- as we find it in Prakrit piai (pivati < pibati) and paisai (praviṣati). A (kind of) b_p > b_v-dissimilation would be ubbilāvita- ‘elated, happy, arrogant’ if < ubbilāpita-* (see p. 46).

Clusters are assimilated according to § 16-18 (unless they are split up by a vowel [see § 21] – the first a western, the latter an eastern feature of Pāli) but only the second sound is retained (khāyati 'appears like' < khyāyate, ñante 'near' < nyante, ñāṇa- 'knowledge' < jñāna-, vajati 'walks' < vrajati, thana- 'breast' < stana-, thāna- 'place' < sthāna-). ṛC- as a rule corresponds to OIA ṛC(r/l/v)-: kamati 'walks' (kramate), kaṭhita- 'boiling' (kvathita- [see p. 87]), gāma- 'village' (grāma-), saṇha- 'smooth, gentle' (ślakṣṇa-), semha- 'phlegm'

⁵ As a matter of fact, Indian grammarians (cf. Pāṇ 8,4.46-52) and authors of *Prātiśākhya*s teach that (e.g.) -rC- is to be pronounced as -rCC-. The outcome of splitting up such a cluster by an anaptyctic vowel is a -rVCC- syllable (see JACOBI, Kleine Schriften p. 58-59).

The development of aggini- (< agni-) – assimilation and svarabhakti – is comparable to ācariya- (< ācārya-) – shortening of a long vowel and svarabhakti (see p. 19). As to this sound change see BERGER (1955: 31), OBERLIES (1996: 108-109) and

2.4. Sandhi

§ 23. External sandhi⁸ in Pāli differs fundamentally from that in Sanskrit.

It is always optional and applies only to words which are syntactically closely connected. It permits all kinds of hiatus (e.g. so ahaṃ, Sn 192)

¹ On the metrical value (– – –x) see Sadd V 1560.

⁶ NORMAN (1992: 139) gives other examples of this phenomenon.

⁷ See BERGER (1955: 82-83), TURNER (1978: 378) and OBERLIES (1995: 141). Diff. NORMAN (1992: 170): snuṣā- > suṣṇā-* > suṇisā- / suṇhā-.

and elides and contracts initial as well as final vowels (including ‘nasal’ ones). Therefore it is not always obvious what vowels suffered sandhi change, the more so as the law of mora can obscure vocalic length. This is one of the reasons why the scribes secondarily restored long vowels even before geminates¹. A historical outline of sandhi operations is extremely difficult, particularly as our texts show a great number of Sanskritic sandhis which were introduced as a result of the application of the rules of the Pāli grammarians. For practical reasons the following account is purely descriptive.

Vocalic sandhi is basically of two kinds, (1) elision and (2) contraction – both characterised by the replacement of two syllables by one. Each of these types exhibits several varieties. – 1. Other than in Sanskrit, all vowels (incl. ‘nasal’ vowels) of both (a) the final of the previous word and (b) the initial of the following one may be elided (for the elision of a vowel before/after a similar vowel see 2.b): (a) sīharāja v’ asambhūto (va a°)², ten’ upasaṃkami (tena upa°), iv’ ossajanti (iva o°), manas’ icchasi (°sā icch°), Mahiy’ eka ° (Mahiyā eka°), yath’-odhikāni (yathā-o°), sā kath’ ajja anuccaṅgī (kathaṃ ajja), man’ amhi ... mārāpito (manaṃ amhi)³, anagāriy’ upetassa (anagāriyaṃ upe°), kath’ eko ramasī arañṇe (kathaṃ eko), h’ apeti (hi ap°), sayaneh’ āvasathehi (°hi āvas°), p’ etāni (pi etāni), paripucch’ ahaṃ (°pucchim ahaṃ), sādh’ āvuso (sādhū āvuso), t’ atthi (te atthi), tamanud’ āsīno (°nudo āsīno), mokkh’ ito (mokkho ito), vāyas’ etto (vāyaso etto), jan’ ocināyatu, Ja VI 4,19* (jano oci °, thus Ee [unmetr.]); (b) iti ’haṃ (iti ahaṃ), kati-haṃ ‘a few days’, S I 7,15* (*kati-ahaṃ),

If two identical vowels come together one is elided (this could be regarded as a peculiar contraction): kec 'ime (keci ime), m 'etaṃ (me etaṃ). In both cases (c) the remaining (short) vowel can be lengthened by compensation¹, even if a double consonant follows the elided vowel of the second word (in the case of -' ā- < -e/o a- an intermediate stage *-a a- can be assumed²): (I) ken 'īdha (kena idha), saddh 'īdha (saddhā idha), c 'ūpatapeti (ca upa°), id 'āhaṃ (idaṃ ahaṃ)³, yes 'īdha (yesaṃ idha), kukkuciy 'ūpacchinde (°iyaṃ upa°), kassac 'āhaṃ (°ci ahaṃ), ās 'ūpasampadā (āsi upa°), k 'āhaṃ (kiṃ ahaṃ), sādh 'āhaṃ (sādhū ahaṃ), s 'īdha (su idha), am 'āhaṃ (amuṃ ahaṃ), y 'ābhivādanti (ye abhi°), rat 'āhaṃ (rato ahaṃ), (II) Cundā ti (Cunda iti), bhuñjāmī ti (°mi iti), sū 'dha (su idha). Repeatedly the elided vowel, especially that of a monosyllabic word (see GEIGER § 71c), was secondarily restored in form of the corresponding half vowel⁴: ty-atthu (t' atthu < te atthu), ty-ābhivadī (*t' ābhivadī < [i]ti abhi°), ky-āssa (*k' assa < ke assa), ky-āhaṃ (*k' āhaṃ < kiṃ ahaṃ)⁵, pātv-ākāsi (*pāt' ākāsi < pātu akāsi), khv-āssa (kh' assa < kho assa), sv-ājja (s' ajja < so ajja). kritic' sandhis result¹: kāmesv-ādīnavam (°esu ādīn°), bhavesv-aham (bhavesu aham), Ap 516,14. Sometimes, however, this restoration went wrong: itv-eva, Th 869 = M II 100,5*, instead of +ity-eva < it-eva* < *iti eva*², pamuty-atthi (pamutt*' atthi < pamutti atthi). A special kind of 'elision' involves the assimilation of a final -i to a preceding consonant: app ekacce, Vin I 6,27, app eva, Sn 460, app ekadā, M I 238,30, icc ab-ravī, Sn 355, icc āha, Ja IV 177,20*, kacci-ss-amajjapo (kacci si ama°), Ja VI 23,7*³. – 2. Taking into account type 1.c., it might be said that – other than in Skt. – all vowels (incl. nasal vowels) can be contracted (and, indeed, some editors write kenīdha or kenīdha [cf. Sn 793], etc.). But if we regard this sandhi as an elision with (compensatory) lengthening, we have in principle the same contractions as in OIA: (a) Vowels, which differ in quantity only, coalesce to the corresponding long vowel (i.e. basically a sandhi of type 1.c): yassānusayā (yassa anu°), panāyasmā (pana ā°), yathābhirantaṃ (yathā abhi°), gavaṃpatīdha (°pati idha). If a double consonant follows, this vowel is generally shortened (i.e. basically a sandhi of type 1.a), only rarely is the long vowel restored: yassatthāya (yassa a°), uṇṇassa (uṇṇā assa), yaṃ picchaṃ na labhati (pi icchaṃ); nāccasārī (na acc°), sāssa (sā assa). In the same way -am, -iṃ and -uṃ are contracted: vācābhikaṃkhāmi (vācaṃ abhi°), munīdha (munīṃ idha); (b) Like OIA Pāli allows the contraction of final -a and -ā with a following dissimilar vowel into -e- and *-o-*⁴: nigrodhasseva (°assa iva), atho (atha u), nopa-

These sandhis occur also (a) at the seam of (newly formed) compounds² and (b) within words (of usually more than three syllables): (a) mahodadhi- 'ocean', mahesi- 'great sage' (mahā+isi- [< ṛṣi-]), att'ukkamsanā- 'self-praise' (atta+ukkk°), sati 'paṭṭhāna'- 'application of mindfulness' (sa+ti+upa°), udadh'ūpama- 'comparable to the ocean' (°dhi+upa°); (b) accāyika- 'urgent, pressing' (āt,yayika-), accāsana- 'eating too much' (at,yaśana-), accāhita- 'very unfriendly' (at,yahita-), anvādhika- 'extra supplying' ([ē: *annādhika- <] an_uvadhika-), paccāmitta- 'enemy' (prat,y-amitra-), paccūsa- 'dawn of day' (*prat,y-uṣa[ṣ]-)³. As to vūpa° (< *v_y-upa°) see § 10 rem. b (p. 58-59).

Pāli knows a different vocalisation at the seam of preverb and noun (cf. PISCHEL § 163 and OBERLIES 1993: 21 n. 16): pāṇā duppaṭi-ānayā 'his vital spirits are difficult to be brought back', Ja IV 43,4* (matassa ... pāṇaṃ paṭi-ānetuṃ na sakkā, ct.), paṭi-oloketha 'look back', Ja II 406,15 (prat,yavalokayati), pāṭi-ekka- ~ pāṭi-yekka- 'several' (prat,yeka- [on pāṭi- see p. 96 n. 5 and cf. -ñ before palatals (karissañ ca, Ja III 437,25*, bheriñ carāpetvā, Ja III 410,11), it is only affected before enclitics (incl. vocatives) which form a whole with the preceding word, thus entailing a peculiar sandhi¹: evañ-hi, Vin I 112,8, kathañ-hi, yañ-hi ... tañ-hi, Th 226, cittañ-hi, It 13,8*, evan-te, *kin ti*², han ti, man tāta, Thī 274, evam-eva, evam-me, evam-pi, yam-pi ... tam-pi. If followed by y(eva) it is assimilated to this (see § 16.1): tañ ñeva (taṃ yeva)³.

rem. The (alleged) "retrograde mutation of Anusvāra into m" (GEIGER § 71.2b; cf. PISCHEL § 349) is a (historical) sandhi (°Vm-V°) that provides a short final syllable (see p. 17-18 n. 6)⁴: yathā bandhitum icchati (्-्-), Thī 299, devānam issaro (्-्-), Cp 53.

Consonants at the seam of compounds (on which see rem. below) and of prefix and 'root', and at the junction of a word and a following enclitic (pace GEIGER § 72) are assimilated, though in part according to special rules (see § 20)⁵: jaraggava- 'an old cow' (jarad+g°), (a)bahiggata° ' (not) directed outside', Vv 835, puthujjana- (see p. 52 n.6), gaddūhana- (gāṃ-dohana-*)⁶, punabbhava- (punar+bhava-)⁷, tappaccayā (tad+pratyayāt), Cp

This gemination of consonants is, however, often analogical (see § 14.16).

Words which stand in close syntactical juncture are sometimes treated like members of a compound⁴: na-ccaje, Ja V 340,5*, na-ppajahanti, M I 14,15, tatra-ssu, M I 77,28. Such cases served as pattern for other units: muni-ppakāsayi, Sn 251.

Rather common are compounds with (a) an inversion of the expected word-order (see OBERLIES 1989/90: 159-160 n. 7), (b) (so-called) 'syntactical compounds' (see NORMAN 1992: 157 [ad Sn 72]) and (c) compounds of the type phalāphala (see CPD s.v. ⁴ā, SPEYER ZDMG 65 [1911] 316-318 and HOFFMANN, Aufs. I,118): (a) ambapakka(m) 'ripe mango fruit', Ja III 54,14*, akkhacchinno 'whose axle is broken', S I 57,22*, hatthacchinno 'whose hands are cut', Ja II 120,11*, aṅgulicchinnaṃ 'whose finger has been cut off', Vin I 91,10, veṇikatā 'having braided hair', Ja V 425,13 (ct. kata-veṇiyo), veṇikato, II 185,10*, vaṅkaghastā 'having swallowed the hook', Ja VI 113,6* (gilitalalisā, ct.); (b) viceyyadānaṃ 'a gift given with forethought', Ja IV 361,9; (c) maggāmagassa kovidam 'knowing every path', Sn 627. Cases as kuttavālehi vaḷavārathehi 'with cars (drawn by) mares whose manes were braided', D I 105,9, rather belong to the domain of syntax. On unverbated phrases see LANMAN, JAOS 40 (1920) 194-198, and EDGERTON, JAOS 79 (1959) 43.¹

Also in compounds the sequence of three short syllables is avoided (see p. 35 n. 2): añjanāvana-, Ja III 274,11*, sarabhāmigā, Ja VI 537,31* (cf. ct.), sāmāmigī- 'black hind', Ja II 44,20 (Bⁱ sāmaṃ nāma migī), agha-m-miga- 'wild dangerous beast', Ja VI 247,26*, 507,5* (see CPD, Epilegomena 31* [s.v. rhythm. length.], I,549 [s.v. ajā-migga] and OBERLIES 1989/90: 160-161; cf. VON HINÜBER § 160 and NORMAN 1992: 184 [ad Sn 181-182]).

§ 25. A hiatus, though generally permitted (including in compounds¹), can be bridged by (a) a glide² or (b) a (so-called) sandhi consonant, which may be a relic from OIA or analogically inserted³. ⁴ (Historically false) resolution of compounds creates new words (see also § 6.5 and 12.15): middha- ‘torpor’ ← thīna-m-iddha- < styāna+ṛddhi- ‘increase of stupefaction’ (see EDGERTON, NIA 2 [1939] 607-610; diff. SAKAMOTO-GOTO [1993: 302 n. 22] who derives middha- from Vedic mṛddhā-).

⁵ On these meanings see EDGERTON, JAOS 79 (1959) 43.

⁶ A parallel, viz. Ap 69,12, has kusamāsana- (!).

⁷ See CPD s.v. ¹*addha*.

⁸ In analogy ā-y-ūhati ‘strives’ is formed (see Sadd V 1243 and CPD apa-viyūhati; diff. KERN, IF 25 [1909] 234-239).

V 197,18*, sa-h-Indakā ‘including Indra’¹, Pv 153, Vv 153, 292, 803, su-h-utṭhitam ‘well arisen’, Sn 178, Vv 613; (b) The retention of final consonants before enclitics or in fossilised formulas (pag-eva, sabbhir-eva, chaḷ-eva, etad-avoca, pātur-ahosi)² is generalised and different (voiced) consonants (-d-, -m-, -y-, -r-, -v-, -h-)³ are inserted to bridge hiatus between two words: anva-d-eva ‘afterwards’ (anvak + eva), samma-d-aññāya ‘having understood [it] properly’, giri-m-iva ‘like a mountain’, mā rocaya-m-abhisangam ‘do not find delight in attachment’, Ja V 6,8*, mā pādāṃ khaṇi-y-asmani ‘do not dig in the stone’, Ja III 433,11*, dhi-r-atthu ‘woe upon ...’, °dhammena-v-onatā ‘cast down by (anything) having the characteristic of ...’, Th 662, °piyaka-h-asana° ‘piyaka- and asana- trees’, Ja V 420,2. Often historical sandhis (aggir-iva, dharaṇīr-iva) furnish the pattern for new formations (rājā-r-iva), sometimes due to rhyme (kata-r-asmāsu ... bhatti-r-asmāsu ‘done towards us ... devotion towards us’ [kṛtam asmāsu ... bhaktir asmāsu], Ja V 352,10*-11*, ... bhavanti-r-assa / ... narassa, Ja VI 206,5*-6*)⁴. A -y- is inserted especially between the components of the ‘umlaut’ -ai- (see § 3.1): na-y-idam, Thī 166, cha-y-ime, MI 51,16 (as to the shortening of a long vowel before a sandhi consonant, see below). In a number of words these consonants have become fixed (yittṭha- ‘sacrificed’ < iṣṭa-, vutta- ‘said’ < ukta-, vuppati ‘is sown’ < upyate) – a process creating doublets ([y]eva ~ eva, [v]ubho, Ja VI

Before sandhi consonants⁶ a long vowel can be shortened (-e and -o to -a), and a nasal vowel may lose its nasality⁷: (... bhariyā ... / samugga-pakkhitta) nikinṇa-m-antare ‘(his wife) is put inside’, Ja III 529,10*-11* (= nikinṇā, ct.), hitva-m-aññam ‘having left the other behind’, Sn 1071, sobhañjanā lodda-m-atho pi padmakā ‘sobhañjana-, lodda- and *padmaka-trees’, Ja V 405,19, yatha-r-iva ‘like’, D I 90,17, sarada-r-iv ‘like ... in autumn’, Sn 687, haṃsa-r-iv ‘ajjhapatto ‘I have arrived ... like a goose ...’, Sn 1134, rūpañ ca-h-idaṃ bhikkhave attā abhavissa ‘If (ce)

3. Morphology

3.1. The noun

§ 28. 1. Like OIA, Pāli distinguishes three (grammatical) genders, masculine, feminine and neuter (see GEIGER § 76 and BLOCH 1965: 149)¹. Neuter nouns are inflected like masculines except for the nom./acc. sg. and pl., which are always identical. Pāli has lost the dual (a process partly due to the development au > o [see § 12.2]²) which is replaced by the plural: dve pi cakkhūni ‘both eyes’, Ja IV 137,16³, candimasuriyānaṃ ‘of sun and moon’, D I 10,14. Only a few dual forms have survived⁴: Kakusandha-

¹ The nominal system of Pāli formally distinguishes nouns and adjectives on the one hand and pronouns on the other. In addition, Pāli has – like OIA/Sanskrit – indeclinable terms (ca, ce [on which see OLDENBERG, Kl. Sch. p. 939 n. and OBERLIES 1997: 17-18], āmo [cf. CAILLAT, IF 71 (1966) 308], no, tarahi, yadā) including pre- and postpositions (nadiṃ Nerañjaram pati, Sn 425 = Thī 306 = 309 ≠ 317 = 319, pitugharam paṭi | nayimsu, Thī 419, saddo tiro janapadaṃ suto, Ja VI 423,26*) and preverbs, which – as a rule – occur immediately preceding the verb or another preverb. rem. (a) The three gender distinction persists throughout Pāli in nouns and non-personal pronouns. The plural, however, (particularly that of a-stems) already at an early date shows evidence of confusion between masculine and neuter (sabbe kaṭṭhamayā vanā, Ja I 289,29* [~ nom. vanam], ete ... lakkhaṇā, Ja V 434,25*/29* [~ nom. lakkhaṇam])²; especially the use of -āni for the acc. pl. m. points to the incipient break-down of the gender system, which seems to have begun in the east (see SCHWARZSCHILD 1991: 188)³. And the simplification of the complicated OIA inflexion sometimes entailed a change of gender (on the frequent transference of neuter as- to masc. a-stems see. 2.c [above])⁴. This was used as a (kind of) metrical licence (especially) in younger texts: balākayonimhi ‘in the womb of a heron’ (---), Ap 42,11 (qu. Sadd 205,10-11); (b) Some apparent instances, however, are due to gender attraction⁵: pubbe kira so vanasaṇḍo araṇṇo ahosi, Ja I 170,11 (see CPD s.v. araṇṇa), dānaṃ sīlaṃ ... akkodhaṃ, Ja III 274,2* (see CPD s.v. akkodha), pabbatāni vanāni ca, Dh 188 (~ pabbato), Kusāvatimhi nagare, Cp 28; (c) The negative prefix a- (before vowels an- for which sometimes n- may be substituted [neka- ‘several’, Sn 308 (see § 27), nāgamo ‘non-arrival’, Ja VI

§ 30. 1. The nom. sg. of the masc. a-inflexion¹ in °o is characteristic for the western language, that in °e for the (proto-canonical) eastern language (see § 1)²; some such forms, however, have been adopted in Ceylon from the local vernacular (which had an e-nominative) to characterise uncultivated language, e. g. of heretics³ (see also § 4.2)⁴. – 2. It is only in pādā ‘with the foot’, which is formed in analogy with (petrified) padā, that the instr. sg. ends in *-ā*⁵ (pace GEIGER § 78.1). The instr. in -asā is taken over from the as-stems⁶. – 3. The alleged⁷ dat. sg. in °ā (esanā ‘in

This form is not attested in the Vinayaṭṭakā (see VON HINÜBER 1968: 40-41). ⁴ The nom. kitavā ‘gambler’, Ja VI 228,19*, Dhṛp 252, is based on kitavo which is remodelled under the influence of the vant-stems (see LÜDERS, Philologica Indica p. 786).

⁵ See VON HINÜBER (1968: 168-173). NORMAN (1992: 172 [ad Sn. 119]), however, argues with such an ā-instrumental (the alleged instrumental abbatā, Sn 839 [NORMAN 1992: 319], is however a simple ablative; see CPD s.v. abbata).

Takkāriye, Ja IV 247,24*, Bhesike, D I 225,7, 226,9, Medakathālike, S V 168,22 – (allegedly *Magadhisms*¹) are feminine forms used as nick-names (see CPD s.v. ²avitakka, rem.)². khattiye ‘prince!’, Ja III 109,12*, however, shows the ‘productive’ e-suffix (see p. 170). – 6. The nom. pl. in °āso (samuppilavāso ‘jumping up and down’, Sn 670) is a continuation of Vedic °āsah (see § 1), with °āse as the corresponding ‘eastern’ form (ariyāse ‘good ones’, Ja IV 222,21*, paṇḍitāse ‘wise men’, Sn 875, samaṇa-brāhmaṇāse ‘ascetics and brahmins’, Sn 1079-1082, saṃkhāta-dhammāse ‘for who the doctrine is well-taught’, S II 47,13*)³. The same holds true for the acc. pl. in °āni (puttāni āmantaya tambanette ‘summon the ... boys!’, Ja VI 290,9*) as Aśoka proves (pulisāni, PE IV)⁴. This ending is used sporadically for the nominative: tālataruṇāni ‘young shoots of the palmyra tree’, Vin I 189,11 (acc. °aruṇe, ibid. 10)⁵. – 7. The acc. pl.

ends in *°e*¹. This ending, which is called for by the instr. in °ehi and the loc. in °esu (due to the analogy with kaññā - kaññāhi - kaññāsu or aggī/bhikkhū - aggīhi/bhikkhūhi - aggīsu/bhikkhūsu), is taken over from the pronominal flexion (see § 42.2). For the acc. in °āni see 6. The employment of -e and -āni avoids the homonymy of the acc. sg. and the acc. pl. (-am* < -ān). – 8. The ending of the instr. and abl. pl. *-ehi*² developed out of Vedic *°ebhiḥ*³ (see p. 91), an ending which is only very rarely preserved: ariyebhi ‘by the noble ones’, Ud 61,2*, Vin IV 204,11*⁴. VON HINÜBER § 317). And also the pronominal declension (instr. pl. tebhiḥ, etc.) may have contributed to its formation (see BERGER 1955: 83 n. 166, and WITZEL, in: Dialectes dans les littératures indo-aryennes [édité par COLETTE CAILLAT]. rem. There is no ('eastern') loc. pl. in -ehi. The alleged instances are due to syntactic innovations, i.e. -ehi is used as a generalized oblique case ending (ajinamhi haññate dīpī, nāgo dantehi haññati 'the leopard is killed for his skin, the elephant for his tusks', Ja VI 61,4*)¹.

² In the introduction of M. / W. GEIGER, Die zweite Dekade der Rasavāhinī. München 1918, p. 7, it is pointed out that katavedino might be a wrong reading for katavediko which is attested at Ras II 8:1.

⁶ The voc. uppalamāladhārine āveḷine, Vv 293 = 314 = 804, which GEIGER (§ 95.2) records, is a wrong reading for °ini (see CPD s. vv. āveḷi(n), appalamālā) resp. °inī (so Ee).

§ 35. Apart from the historical form of the nom. sg. (in -ū, see § 10.7) the masc. ū-stems – all *nomina verbalia*¹ – are inflected as u-stems²: (nom. sg.) abhibhū, It 122,7, D I 18,7, S I 121,16*, (a)vadaññū, Sn 663, Pv 548, pāragū, D I 88,5, rattaññū, D I 48,2, viññū, Sn 39, 403, pāragu, Th 66, vedagu, Sn 322, 1060, mataññū, S IV 175,29, (acc.) abhibhum, DhP 418, Sn 534, 642, vadaññum, Sn 487, (instr.) sayambhunā, Mil 214,29, (gen.) abhibhussa, S I 157,10, akataññussa, Ja I 322,10*, aviññussa, Vin III 28,4 (amattaññūno, S IV 103,27, seems to have its -ū- from the nom.), (loc.) abhibhusmiṃ, M I 2,28, (nom.-acc. pl.) addhagū, Thī 55, amattaññū, Ja II 293,16*, rattaññū, Sn 92,22, vadaññū, Ja IV 34,15*, S I 34,21*, (instr.) amattaññūhi, S II 218,19, viññūhi, D II 93,33, S I 9,14, (gen.) viññūnam, Th 667, S IV 93,22, rattaññūnam, A I 25,18, (loc.) viññūsu, A III 153,24. In the same way (a)vidū- ‘(not) intelligent’ (< vidu[ṣ]-) and (a)viddasū- ‘(not) knowing’⁴ are inflected⁵: (nom. sg.) § 36. 1. The OIA fem. i-/u- and ī-/ū-inflections¹ have merged in one ī-/ū-class (only the nom. sg. has -i/u or *-ī/ū*²) which has only one oblique form in the singular (see § 29): (nom.) jāti, devī, (acc.) *devīm*³, (instr./abl./gen./loc.) *deviyā*⁴, (voc.) devi, vadhu, Vin III 16,25, (loc.) deviyam, (nom./voc. pl.) *deviyo*⁵, (acc.) devī, (instr.) devīhi, (gen.) devīnam, (loc.) devīsu. The ū-stems take over the glide consonant -y- from the ī-stems⁶: (obl. sg.) dhenuyā/am, (nom./voc. pl.) dhenuyo. Under the influence of the ā-inflection the nom. pl. in -iyo (/ -īyo) and -uyo was used also as acc. and vice versa the acc. in -ī/ū as nom.⁷: (nom.) pokkharanī, Vv 1168 (if not a sg.), puthū, Th 1190, (acc.) pokkharaniyo, D II 178,23 (so read? Ee -īyo, for which see 6. below), dhenuyo, Vv 1157. – 2. developed in the same way. So we can assume that the oblique endings -īyā and -ūyā (see above) resulted in -īe and -ūe. And precisely these endings are the common ones in Prakrit (see PISCHEL § 385). This purely phonetical explanation would dispense with the derivation of Pkt. -āe, -īe and (analogical) -ūe from (Br+) dat.-gen. -āyai and -(i)yai (pace PISCHEL § 6 / 375, BLOCH 1965: 135, VON HINÜBER § 334 and WITZEL, in: Dialectes dans les littératures indo-aryennes [édité par C. Caillat]. Paris 1989, 214). For -āe such an explanation (Pkt. mālāe < [Pāli] mālāya) was suggested already by ALSDORF, l.c. (cf. SCHWARZSCHILD 1991: 44-46).

These forms offend against ‘Insler’s law’ (see § 4.4). Therefore we have to assume that they were created when this law had ceased to operate, i.e. we have to do with young forms.

rem. itthī- ‘woman’ (strī-) and other originally mono-syllabic nouns are inflected as regular ī-stems¹. nāgarāje ‘king of the nāgas!’ and brahme ‘o brahmin’¹ have the generalised ending -e of – e.g. – ise (in the same way the vocative in -o [see p. 177] spread: ayyo ‘noble one(s)’ [used for sg. and pl.²] ≠ arya)³.

Stems with °an- after a double consonant (< °Cman-/van-, also muddha[n]-) retain -a- in the weak cases⁴: (instr.) attanā, DhP 165, amhanā, Sn 443, kammanā, Sn 136, (gen.) attano, DhP 343, Sn 334, (loc.) attani, M I 138,3, Sn 666, asmani, Ja III 433,11*, muddhani, M I 168,29*, Sn 689. The -ā- encroached on the acc. (attanam ‘the self’, Sn 477) which, in turn, formed the basis of new stems (jammana- ‘birth’, Sn 1018, yakana- ‘liver’, D II 293,14, M I 57,17)⁵. Also, the (old) acc. in °ānaṃ was such a source (see § 28.2d), and the stem in °a- used in nominal compounds and (in the case of neuter an-stems) the nom. sg./pl. in °a/°āni, too: attam, attena, ātume, Pv 377, kammena, Ap 4,21, Ja IV 296,11*, D III 147,9*, Vv 1212, kammāya, Ja III 411,7*, S V 92,5, Vin V 22,31, kammehi, Sn 215, kammesu, Sn 140, (nom. sg.) nāmaṃ, Sn 808, (nom./acc.) muddham, D I 95,13, DhP 72, Sn 987/989.

Starting from the nom. sg. ntr. ending in °m/vaṃ (< °m/vat)² the *°m/va(nt)-*stems were transformed into *°m/va-*stems³: (acc. sg. masc.) balavaṃ, Vin II 1,12, bhāṇumaṃ, Sn 1016⁴, satīmaṃ, Sn 212, Himavaṃ, Ja VI 272,4*, Ap 441,21, (gen. sg.) Accimassa, Dīp III 14, iddhimassa, As 421,4, Bandhumassa, D II 7,1, (nom. pl. masc.) mutīmā, Sn 881, (nom. sg. fem.) kittimā, Ja III 70,6* = VI 508,21*, Sirimā, Bv V 21. The same holds good for the participles: jāno (~ jānaṃ)⁵, Ja III 24,2*, dado (~ dadaṃ), S I 32,14*, passo (~ passaṃ), Th 61, anukubbassa (~ kubbantassa*), Ja II 205,10*, III 108,17*. If these forms without *-nt-*⁶ were created in the east of the MIA linguistic area and were taken over into Pāli by replacing the ending -e (as LÜDERS maintained [1954: 158-160]), the pattern putraḥ : putte // dānam : dāne may have played a role: jāno < jāne* (: jānaṃ).

rem. (b) One of the forms without -nt-, viz. visodhaye, Dh 281, ⁴ Since bhānumat- as a designation of the 'sun' is a masculine in Sanskrit it can be assumed that the same holds true for Pāli. But it cannot be ruled out that bhāṇumaṃ goes back to (nom.-acc. ntr. sg.) bhānumat.

⁵ On jānaṃ see VON HINÜBER (1968: 44-45).

⁶ On such forms see GEIGER § 97.2, BERGER (1956: 110), NORMAN (1969: 137 [ad Th 61] and 1992: 168 [ad Sn 92]) and VON HINÜBER § 360 / 490.

was perhaps not 'translated' into its western equivalent, as it was regarded as an optative (see LÜDERS 1954: 159 and BERGER 1956: 110); (c) The part. saṃpajāna- does not belong here (pace LÜDERS 1954: 157-158 and NORMAN 1992: 224 [ad Sn 413]), being an haplological shortening of saṃprajān<ān>aḥ (see § 22.1)¹.

3.2. The pronouns

§ 42. The pronouns have marked peculiarities of inflexion, which entail a transfer to the nominal inflexion by adding the suffix ka- (amuka-, asuka-). They are especially liable to wear and tear and consequently to renewal. Their inflexion, on the other hand, has preserved archaic characteristics such as the use of the dative (as genitive)².

(1) The personal pronouns show a great number of forms which are due to analogies³ between the cases as well as between the numbers. The pronouns of the first and second persons¹ have no distinction of gender. The bracketed forms of the following chart are the ones used more rarely (on which see below):

² But also a 'new' dative is created: yāya atthāya, DI 90,19.

³ (a) tuyhaṃ (≠ tubhyam) is formed in analogy to mayhaṃ (see SMITH, MSL 23 [1935] 272); (b) the nom. mayam (vayam) takes its m- from the oblique cases of the singular, and the initial t- of the plural of the second person stems from the singular, while the -e- of the instr. and loc. (cf. OIA asmābhiḥ, asmāsu) is analogical to the corresponding forms of the third-person pronoun. It was called for by the nom./acc. amhe. This (as nom.) is formed according to the proportion (amhe <) asme* : asmān = te : tān (see p. 186). Later on the ending -ān was replaced by -e, which is the general substitution in the acc. pl., and the acc. was also amhe/asme (see INSLEER, Die Sprache 34 [1988/90] 141); (c) based on amhe the gen. amhaṃ was formed analogical to mamaṃ.

(2) The non-personal pronouns⁷ distinguish gender. The paradigm of ta(d)- is composed of historical and newly created forms:

- ¹ See LÜDERS (1954: 30 n. 2), OBERLIES (1995: 143) and id. (1997: 11 n. 22). For Prakrit (Vasudevahiṇḍi 88,21) see ALSDORF, Kleine Schriften p. 68.
- ² But see p. 69 (rem. f).
- ³ On (the possible accusative) tumhaṃ, Vin IV 241,21, see VON HINÜBER (1968: 110) and id. § 371.
- ⁴ For Prakrit see PISCHEL § 422.
- ⁵ See VON HINÜBER § 371.
- ⁶ And also amhākaṃ and tumhākaṃ, Ja I 221,29, are ordinary genitives (see CPD s.v. amhākaṃ [pace GEIGER § 104.1]).
- ⁷ See GEIGER § 105-106 and VON HINÜBER § 374-378 (for Prakrit see PISCHEL § 423-425). The pronouns so, sā, taṃ (etc.) are "used to strengthen other pronouns", usually preceding them, and "so may refer also to the person contained in a verbal form: so karoḥi '(you) do!', Dhp 236, so tato cuto amutra udapādiṃ 'departed from there I was born again at that place', D I 13,23" (GEIGER § 106). The relative pronoun followed by a corresponding form of the 3. person personal pronoun acquires the meaning 'whoever, whichever'.

| | singular | | | plural | | |
|--------|----------------------|-----------------|-------------------------------------------------|------------------------|-------------|----------------------------------|
| nom. | so (sa, se) | taṃ (se) | sā | te | tāni | tā (tāyo) |
| acc. | taṃ | | | | | |
| instr. | tena | | tāya | tehi | | tāhi |
| abl. | tamhā, tasmā | | | | | |
| gen. | tassa | | tassā, tissā (tāya, tissāya) | tesaṃ (tesānaṃ) | | tāsaṃ (tāsā- naṃ) |
| loc. | tamhi, tasmim | | tassaṃ (tāsaṃ), tis- saṃ (tāyaṃ) | tesu | | tāsu |

The nom. sg. masc. sa – in OIA only allowed before consonants – stands beside so, which becomes the dominant form. The nom. sg. ntr. taṃ (tat) has the nominal ending -aṃ. The corresponding ‘eastern’ form of both so and taṃ is *se*¹, which is also part of seyyathā ~ sayathā, Th 412 (< Atharvaveda [Śaunaka] 17,1.20-21 / Brāhmaṇa+ sá yáthā)² – taṃyathā, Mil 1,13³, seems to be a ‘hyper-translation’. After the model of the fem. (tā) the nom. masc. te was used also for the acc. The instr. fem. sg. tāya

¹ se = taṃ is wrongly translated as so (nesaṃ bhavissati uposathakammaṃ), Vin I 102,30 (see also p. 69 n. 6). For Prakrit se – used also for the oblique cases (on such se in Pāli see LEUMANN, Kleine Schriften p. 547, and AiGr. III § 238ba rem.) – see PISCHEL § 423 and OBERLIES (1999: 49-50 with n. 71).

² See p. 13 (and PISCHEL § 423). Also BHS knows sayyathā (see BHSD s.v. yathāpi).

³ See TRENCKNER (1908: 104). Cf. AMg. taṃ-jahā (Āyāraṅgasutta 6,11, 17,21).

(tayā) is borrowed from the nominal type kaññāya – as is the nom./acc. pl. tāyo (see § 31.4) – to avoid homonymity with the 2nd person pronoun tayā (tvayā). The gen. sg. tissāya has a blended ending (tissā x [tā]ya) as have some forms of the gen. pl. (tesānaṃ, tāsānaṃ; cf. esānaṃ, M II 154,2, katamesānaṃ, D I 206,5, Vin III 7,22, sabbesānaṃ, M III 60,24). On tissā (tasyāḥ) see § 7.11¹, on tāsaṃ (tasyām) § 3.4. The stem used in compounds is taṃ-/ta(d)- (Vv 1264, Th 719)².

(3) The stems eta(m)- and ya(m)- (these are the stem-forms: Vin I 57,35; Ja III 131,12*, IV 107,20*) inflect in the same way³. An ‘eastern’ nom. sg. ntr. is ye (D II 278,16, M II 254,24⁴) which is also part of yebhuyyena ‘mostly, usually’. The anaphorical pronoun ena(m)- is used only as acc. of all three genders (enaṃ)⁵. After the pattern of ta(m)- : eta(m)- a new anaphorical pronoun na- is created to ena(m)- which inflects like *(e)ta(m)-*⁶.

rem. (a) Owing to dialect mixture the endings of the nom./acc. pl. were identical for masc. and neuter (-ā, -āni). This contributed to the confusion of the masc. and neuter plural forms, frequently encountered when a relative pronoun refers to a noun: vinicchayā yāni pakappitāni, Sn 838¹, ratanāni .. ye ... ratanāni ... te, Ja VI 274,9*-12*; (b) As naṃ, Ja VI 511,2*, refers to ‘mother and father’ it should be an acc. pl.

(4) The stem ki(ṃ)- of the interrogative pronoun² (this is also the stem-form: kiṃjacca-, Sn 80,13, kiṃsīla-, Sn 324) is not only used for the nom./acc. sg. ntr. but forms derived from it supplement the ‘ka-paradigm’³ (kiñ[ci desam], Vin III 168,1 [koci deso, ibid. 168,5], kismā, kissa, kimhi, kismiṃ) which inflects as ta(ṃ)- does (and as katara- and katama- do⁴). This contributes to the mingling of the masculine and neuter forms, which is complemented by a levelling of sing. and pl. forms: ko nu tumhe ‘Who are you?’, Ja V 390,18*.

rem. (a) On ke, D III 24,19* = 25,3* (cf. GEIGER § 111.1), see LÜDERS (1954: 14-15) – diff. ⁴ See GEIGER § 111.2 and 3. On katamesāṇaṃ see p. 186.

⁵ One may think, however, of a different – and more simple – explanation: konāmo te upajjhāyo is a crossing of ko te upajjhāyo and kiṃnāmo te upajjhāyo. Cf. also phrases like tvam konāmo sī ti pucchi, ahaṃ Dīghapittiko nāma sāmī ti, bhāriyā te kānāmā (!) ti, Ja VI 338,10’-11’, and kānāmā te pavattinī, Vin II 272,38.

naṃ, (loc.) kaṭīsu (see GEIGER § 111.4 and CPD s.v.).

(5) In the paradigm of *ida(m)*¹ – this is the stem form (idappaccaya-, D I 185,27)² – historical forms ([masc. sg.] ayaṃ, imaṃ – both forms also fem. –, *asmā*³, *assa*⁴, asmim, [pl., (nom./acc.)] ime, ehi, esaṃ, esu, [fem. sg.] assā, [fem. pl.] imā, *āsaṃ*⁵, [ntr.] idaṃ, imāni) are complemented by new ones based on the old acc. imaṃ: (masc. sg.) *imassa*⁶, imasmim, (pl.) imehi, imesaṃ, imesu, (fem. sg.) imāya, imissā, imāsaṃ, (pl.) imāyo, imāhi, imāsaṃ, imāsu, (ntr.) imaṃ. Since the enclitic gen. pl. esaṃ and āsaṃ – both used for masc. and fem.⁷ – can lose their initial vowel in sandhi (na'saṃ) these forms were reinforced (esānaṃ, āsānaṃ). The instability of the initial, however, remained ('sānaṃ)⁸.

rem. On tadaminā see § 5.8

¹ See GEIGER § 108 and VON HINÜBER § 382-387; for Prakrit see PISCHEL § 429-430. Also this pronoun is frequently combined with other pronouns (see GEIGER § 108.2 and CPD s.v. ayaṃ)

² As to the sandhi see § 24 (p. 121-122).

³ asmā is also used as a feminine: asmā ratyā vivasane, Ja VI 492,7* = 24*.

⁵ On āsaṃ as gen. pl. masc. see CPD I 406a (last line) and NORMAN (1991: 181 [g. 278]).

⁶ This form is anticipated by imāsyā, RV 8.13.21 (see TEDESCO, Language 21 [1945] 138). Another form of the gen. sg. masc. is imissa, Ja I 333,2 (cf. GEIGER § 108.1).

(7) A number of adjectives are inflected, in part or wholly, according to the pronominal declension ([e.g.] loc. sg. fem. in -assaṃ ~ -āya, nom. pl. masc. in -e ~ -ā, gen. in -esaṃ ~ -ānaṃ)⁴: añña(tara)-⁵, (a)para-, itara-, ² GEIGER (§ 109) gives also amuyo. But this is only a grammarian's form.

³ The gen. amūsānaṃ which GEIGER cites is not attested.

⁴ (Loc. sg. fem.) uttarassaṃ disāyaṃ, S I 148,4*, ~ uttarāya disāya, D I 74,23, 153,19, Ap 541,5 (cf. uttarāyaṃ disāyaṃ, Vasudevahiṇḍi 280,27), (nom. pl. masc.) añ- uttara-, ekacca- and *sabba*¹.

rem. (a) ²*vissa-* is most probably (and only²) attested at Ja V 153,9* (visse devā ... Tāvatiṃsā sa-indakā [Ee misse]); (b) tuviya- ‘your’, Ja V 26,20* (cf. B^d) qu. Sadd 805,2 (so read according to CPD s.vv. *apa/avarādha*³), seems likewise to be a hapax; (c) The oblique cases of atta(n)- are employed in sg. as reflexive pronoun of all three persons and genders and of both numbers⁴. The same holds good for the nom. and gen. of tuma-: tumo, A III 124,10, Sn 890, Vin II 186,31, tumaṃ, Pv 410, tumassa, Sn 908 (GEIGER § 107.4)⁵; (d) The possessive pronoun for all three persons is sa(ka)- ‘own’ (sva[ka]-): saṃ, Ja VI 327,20* (read san niketaṃ), sena, Ja II 22,23*, samhā, Ja VI 502,34*, samhi, D II 225,17*⁶, sāni, M I 366,5, sesu, Ja V 26,4*, sakaṃ, Ja IV 331,7*, sakamhā, D I 81,25, sake, Ja IV 103,15*.

ñatarā, S IV 341,23, itarā, Dīp VI 26 (see GEIGER § 113 and OBERLIES 1997: 10).

⁵ There is also a fem. i-form in the paradigm of añña-: aññissā, M I 30,27, Vin I 15,10.

² GEIGER’s (§ 113.2) sole example, Dhṛp 266, does not belong here. As Gāndhārī Dhṛp 67 shows, we have here vissaṃ < veśmam (see BROUGH 1962: 191-192).

⁶ It is possible that Th 1211 has the loc. s(v)amhi (see OBERLIES 1995: 137).

3.3. The numerals

§ 43. (1) The numeral¹ eka- ‘one’ inflects as a pronominal adjective (see § 42.7)², i.e. (nom. pl.) eke ‘some’, (gen.) ekesaṃ, (obl. fem.) *ekissā/ekissaṃ*³; (2) Due to the loss of the dual the numeral ‘two’ (with the stems d[u]vā-, d[(u)v]i-, d[v]e-, du[v]- and bā-) had to be remodelled. Its inflexion is the same for all three genders⁴. The form of the nom./acc. fem. and ntr., d(u)ve (cf. OIA d_uvē), was transferred to the masc., the ending being identical to that of ime, te, *sabbe*⁵. The remaining cases are formed analogical to those of the numeral ‘three’ (as is the gen. of ubha-): dvīhi, *dvinnam*⁶, dvīsu (beside ‘eastern’ duvesu). ubha- has generalised the o of the nom. (<ubhau): nom./acc. ubho, instr./abl. ubhohi, gen. ubhinnaṃ, loc. ubhosu (cf. ubho<hi> hatthehi, ubho<su> kūlesu nadiyā, see § 28.7)⁷. ubhaya- inflects as an a-stem (it is used both in sg. and in pl. with noun

¹ See GEIGER § 114-117, VON HINÜBER § 390-410 and NORMAN (1994: 1-33). For Prakrit see PISCHEL § 435-451.

² ekā, Ja VI 412,15*, does not attest a nominal inflexion: Pañcālā ca Videhā ca ubho ekā bhavantu te means ‘they should come to terms’.

³ In the feminine plural ekaccā- complements ekā- (see Sadd 284,33): ekā, D I 181,1, ~ ekaccāsu, Vin II 65,2.

On the ‘eastern’ nom. sg. ntr. eke see NORMAN (1991: 69) and cf. CPD II,577b.

⁴ The western Aśoka inscriptions keep the inflexion of masc. and fem. apart (G dvo morā, dve cikichā).

⁵ Only the late Apadāna uses the loc. duve (443,1/3).

⁶ On Ja V 387,15* see OBERLIES (1995/96: 298).

⁷ On vubho, Ja VI 509,24*, see § 25 (p. 125-126).

and verb in plural). It is contaminated with dvi- to *dubhaya-*¹; (3) The numeral ti- ‘three’ (with the stems ti- and te-) distinguishes in the nom./acc. all three², and in the genitive two, genders; both these genitives were modelled after catunnaṃ and *channaṃ*³, the fem. one receiving its geminate -ss- from (nom./acc.) tisso: nom./acc. masc. tayo (trayaḥ), fem. tisso (tisraḥ), ntr. tīṇi (trīṇi), gen. masc./ntr. tiṇṇaṃ, fem. tissannaṃ (← tisanaṃ* < tisṇāṃ). The instr./abl. and loc., identical for all genders, show the inflexion of an i-stem (with -ī- in accord with tīṇi): tīhi, tīsu. The gen. also has a double ending (tiṇṇannaṃ, Vin I 162,36, Mil 309,8), by analogy with pañcannaṃ, channaṃ, *sattannaṃ*⁴. --- rem. ti, S II 135,3, Vin IV 119,23, resembling Vedic *trī*⁵, is probably due to a haplology of endings (dve vā t<īṇ>i vā udaka-phusitāni)⁶; (4) ‘Four’ (catu[r]-)⁷ has two forms for nom. and acc. masc. (owing to case confusion and after the model of fem.); also the other cases are historical forms whose compensatory lengthened -ū- conforms to the vocalism of ‘three’: (nom./acc.) cattāro, caturo, (instr./abl.) catūhi, catubbhi, (gen.) catunnaṃ (with a standardized ending

² Thī 518, however, uses tīṇi for the feminine gender: sakhiyo tīṇi (so read) janiyo (see NORMAN 1971: 178-179).

³ As was bahunnaṃ (see p. 20 n. 7).

⁴ See BARTHOLOMAE (1916: 6 n. 2 / 21).

⁵ VON HINÜBER § 393 even sees in tī the direct continuation of Vedic trī (cf. AiGr. III § 177 a rem.).

⁶ See CAILLAT, Sanskrit and World Culture, Berlin 1986, 372 n. 56.

⁷ The stems used in compounds are catu(r)- and cātu(r)-. Is the latter which is also to be found in Prakrit (see PISCHEL § 78 and JACOBI § 14) abstracted from vṛddhi derivations? Cf. temāsa- ‘three months (of the rainy season)’, M I 438,10.

°nnaṃ [\neq °ṛṇām]¹), catūsū (°ūsū, S I 43,2*). The fem. has as nom.-acc. and gen. the historical forms (catasso, catassannaṃ [$<$ catasanaṃ* : tissannaṃ]), whereas the remaining cases are supplied by the masc. (as is the rare acc. caturō [Ja VI 38,2*]). The nom./acc. ntr. is a historical form, too (cattāri); (5-10) The numerals 'five' through 'ten' continue the old forms; but the instr. has the ending -ahi, while the gen. has -annaṃ by analogy (sporadically -anna: pañcanna, Sn 964 [with Nidd I 482,22*], dasanna, Ja V 448,16*) and 'six' has ch- (with cha[t]- as stem) as its initial (see § 13 [p. 71])²: (nom.-acc.) pañca, (instr.-abl.) pañcahi, (gen.) pañcannaṃ, (loc.) pañcasu (etc.). Archaic forms like aṭṭhāhi (aṣṭābhiḥ)³ and dasabhi (daśābhiḥ) are rarely encountered (Ja I 414,5* = III 207,14*, Vin I 38,22).

² 'Eastern' ²*sa-* seems to stand beside 'western' cha- (see VON HINÜBER § 399; but cf. TIEKEN, WZKS 31 [1987] 200). On chaḷa- 'six', Ja VI 238,32* (B^d), see p. 5 n.3 and 197 n. 4.

³ In compounds the final of aṭṭha- may be lengthened: aṭṭhākhuram, Ja I 163,4* = 10* (so read).

(11-18) The numerals ‘eleven’ through ‘eighteen’ have a by-form °rasa-, which probably originated in ‘twelve’ and ‘seventeen’ ([dvādasa-] *bārasa-*¹ < dvādaśa- / sattarasa- < saptadaśa-) by dental dissimilation (see p. 88) to then spread by analogy²: ekādasa- / (°rasa-), pañcadasa-, soḷasa-

¹ Though permitted by the Saddanīti ekārasa- is not attested in the Theravāda canon, and bārasa- ‘twelve’ quoted by this grammar has completely disappeared from the canonical texts (see VON HINÜBER § 400; cf. NORMAN, IJ 34 [1991] 205).

² See BERGER, MSS 47 (1986) 31.

/°rasa-, aṭṭhādaśa- / °rasa-. ‘Thirteen’ (terasa-/telasa- < trayadaśa*-¹) also has a form with -l- < -ḍ- ([aḍḍha]telasa-), as has ‘forty’ (cattālīsa-), while ‘fourteen’ (catuddasa-) also shows also abnormal loss of -t- (cuddasa-) and the genuine MIA forms of ‘fifteen’ are pañṇarasa- and pannarasa- (see § 16.3); (19/29 [etc.]) ‘Nineteen’ is ekūnavīsati- (only Ap 174,22 has ūnavīsa-), ‘twenty-nine’ ekūnatimśa- (only Ja III 138,20* and Ap 181,18 have ūnatimśa-), (etc.); (20/30) As in Epic Sanskrit ‘twenty’ took over the ending of ‘thirty’ (and sometimes also vice versa): vīsati-, vīsa-, vīsā-, timśa-, tīsā-, chattimśati- (viṃśati-, triṃśat-)²; (21-28/31-38) °vīsa- (bāvīsa-, Kvu 138,21, pañṇuvīsa-, Ja III 138,20*) and °vīsati-, timśa- and (sporadically) timśati- are the bases of the numerals ‘21-28’ and ‘31-38’ (‘33’ with analogical levelling: tettimśa- < tetthimśa*- < trayastrimśat-); (40) cattārīsa- has by-forms with -l- and -ḍ- (see also above); compounded with other numerals, it is sometimes shortened to (°)tālīsa- (→ tālīsa-, Ap 103,13, 234,14 [uddāna]); (50) pañṇāsa- ‘fifty’ (beside paññāsa-) shows the same development of -ñc- as ‘fifteen’; (60) The initial of saṭṭhi- contrasts with that of cha(t)- ‘six’. dvaṭṭhi- ‘sixty-two’, D I 54,4, is the ‘eastern’ form corresponding to ‘western’ dvāsaṭṭhi-, S IV 286,24³; (72) Historical bāsaṭṭati- (Vin I 100,11*) is superseded first by dvāsaṭṭati- and then by dvasaṭṭati-; (84) cūlāsīti- ~ cullāsīti- (colāsīti*- [with analogical -ā-, cf. caturāsīti-, Mahābhārata 1,2.96] < ca<t>uraśīti-) is the ‘eastern’ form corresponding to ‘western’ caturāsīti-. The other numerals continue the OIA forms.

The numerals ‘one’ through ‘eighteen’ are used as adjectives, unless they inflect as neuters (sg.) in analogy with vīsaṃ (< viṃśat*). The numeals ‘nineteen’ and upwards are neuter or feminine substantives in -am or -ā and -ti respectively¹. When connected with substantives, they may be used appositionally in the same case as the substantive, or else the qualified substantive may be put in the genitive plural. Often, however, the numerals are not inflected at all. Finally, a determinative compound may be formed².

The ordinals³ continue – mutandis mutatis – the OIA ones (on dutiya- and tatiya- see § 7.8a)⁴. The higher numbers (except for ‘60th’) may be formed by adding °ma- to the cardinal: vīsa-, vīsatima- (viṃśa-, viṃśatitama-), saṭṭhitama-. They are all inflected as a-stems. Their feminine is always in -ā, while those in -ī are used to denote dates (aṭṭhamī- ‘8th day’, cātuddasī- ‘14th day’ [see CDIAL 4606], pañcadasi- ‘15th

² In texts like the Dīpavaṃsa a numeral (as well as ubho) as the first member of a compound can retain its case ending (see TSUCHIDA, StII 13/14 [1987] 306 n. 30): tīṇi-vassamhi nigrodho catuvassamhi bhātaro, chavassamhi pabbajito mahindo ... ‘When (Aśoka had) completed three years, (the story of) Nigrodha happened, after the fourth year (he put his) brothers (to death), after his sixth year Mahinda ... received the Pabbajjā ordination’, Dīp VII 31-32 (OLDENBERG’s transl.).

³ See GEIGER § 118, VON HINÜBER § 411 and NORMAN (1994: 33-47). For Prakrit see PISCHEL § 449.

The acc. of the ordinals is used to form temporal adverbs: paṭhamam ‘the first time’, dutiyaṃ ‘the second time’ (see GEIGER § 119.3).

⁴ Sporadically the ordinal number is used instead of the cardinal number: pañcamehi bandhanehi ‘with five bonds’, S IV 201,22, 202,9 (see GEIGER § 118.4 and OBERLIES 1997: 10-11). On chaḷa- (see above, p. 5 n. 3) see also OBERLIES (1995: 134).

Noteworthy are compounds of ordinal numbers with atta(n)-: attaduttiya- ‘oneself with one companion’, D II 147,21, attacattuttha- ‘oneself with three others’, M I 393,21.

There are other numeral derivatives²: (a) multiplicative adverbs ([saki(m) 'once',] dvikkhattuṃ 'twice', tikkhattuṃ 'thrice')³, (b) adverbs with the suffixes -dā, -dhā and -so (ekadā 'once', dvidhā 'in two parts', sattadhā 'in seven parts', anekaso 'repeatedly'⁴), (c) numeral adjectives with the 'suffixes' °guṇa- and °vidha- (catugguṇa- 'fourfold', aṭṭhaguṇa- 'eightfold', ekavidha- 'single-fold'). To denote fractional sense aḍḍha- is added to the next higher ordinal: aḍḍhatiya- 'two and a half'⁵, aḍḍhuddha- 'three and a half'⁶.

² See GEIGER § 119. For Prakrit see PISCHEL § 450-451.

³ aṭṭhārasa-khattuṃ shows 'tnesis' at Ap 92,23: aṭṭhārasaṃ ca khattuṃ so.

Also vāra- can be used to form multiplicatives: ekavāraṃ 'once', dve vāre 'twice', tayo vāre 'thrice' (see GEIGER § 119.3).

⁴ The adverbial suffix -so is added to numerals in a distributive sense (see GEIGER § 119.3). Quite often it is added also to nouns and adjectives (see NORMAN 1992: 204 [ad Sn 288]).

⁵ On this word see § 22.1.

⁶ See AiGr. III § 178d rem. (p. 349).

If aḍḍha- is added to a cardinal the whole compound denotes half of the numeral: dasaddha- (sic) 'five', Th 1244 (see GEIGER § 119.2; for Prakrit see PISCHEL § 450).

3.4. The Verb

§ 44. Compared with the verb system of OIA, that of Pāli has undergone extensive reorganisation. The dual has been completely lost, and the medium survives only in some forms. Its function has been partly taken over by the causative (bhikkhunī ... bahum lasunam harāpesi ‘The nun brought much garlic’, Vin IV 258,14), and passives in īyati are sporadically used as such: ([upa/pariy/sam]ādiyati ‘clings to; controls; takes, grasps’¹, vediyati ‘feels’², sādiyati ‘takes pleasure in’³; cf. uttariyati ‘boils over’, ruccati ‘indulges in’)⁴. The system of tenses⁵ has been simplified: it comprises the present, the future (and conditional) and a combined preterite consisting of imperfect, aorist and perfect⁶. The subjunctive and the precativ are missing from the moods (cf., however, § 46.2 rem.)⁷. Of derived present stems only the causative, the passive and the denominative are productive categories, while the desiderative and the intensive¹ have been preserved only in a few historical forms: jigucchati ‘is disgusted’ (jugupsate [see § 7.11]), tikicchati ‘cures’ (cikitsati, see p. 88), sussūsati ‘wishes to hear’ (śuśrūṣate)², lālappati ‘talks much’ (lālapyate), jaṅgamati ‘visits’ (jaṅgamyate [:: (anu)caṅkamati ‘walks up and down’ < (*)caṅkramati ← caṅkramīti ~ caṅkramyate])³.

The focus of the verbal conjugation is no longer the root but the present stem, i.e. the 3sg. of the indicative without the ending *-ti*⁴. All regular verb forms are based on it; forms that are not so constructed are chiefly historical relics. According to its stem-final, two ‘conjugations’ can be distinguished. In one type (the more numerous) the present stem ends in -a (the OIA present classes I, VI and IV, the latter as a rule with characteristic -CCa- < *-Cya-*¹); in the other, it ends in a long vowel, most commonly -e (see § 45), fairly often -ā, rarely -ī or *-o*². This ‘second’ conjugation comprises the old athematic presents now made uniform by suppressing alternations, this as a consequence of generalising a frequent form (eti ... enti ‘he goes / they go’³, brūhi ... brūmi, brūti ‘say! / I say / he says’⁴, jahāmi ... jahanti ‘I leave / they leave’, suṇomi ... suṇoma ‘I hear / we hear’); or which were thematicised, i.e. transferred to the ‘first’ conjugation⁵ – a process based on a form constantly used (thus all verbs of class VII and *√bandh*⁶ were thematicised forming a group with muñcati, etc.⁷):

On the old 2nd class and its continuation in Pāli see GEIGER § 140-141 (on atthi see below), for Prakrit see PISCHEL § 492-499. For veti, Th 497, allegedly ‘= vetti’ (GEIGER § 140.1), read (’) vedi (see NORMAN 1969: 201 [ad loc.]).

⁴ See GEIGER § 147-148. For Prakrit see PISCHEL § 502-505.

⁵ See GEIGER § 149(b). For Prakrit see PISCHEL § 508-509.

⁶ This starting-point was favoured by the proportion -āmi : -ati : -anti: jānāmi → jānati (jānāti) ← jānanti.

⁷ See GEIGER § 146 (for Prakrit see PISCHEL § 505 [$\sqrt{\text{stṛ}}$], 510-512). Cf. jānati ‘knows’, (ajjho/apa/avat)tharati ‘spreads, covers’, ($\sqrt{\text{stṛ}}$) punanti ‘they clean’ (on phunanti, Ja VI 108,11*, see OBERLIES 1995/96: 300), lananti ‘they cut’, Mil 33,2 (see GEIGER § 145-146). On manthati ‘churns’ < manthati (* mathnāti ‘robs’) see OBERLIES, OLZ 94 (1999) 392.

Or alternatively, a new stem was extracted from such forms as (3sg.) jũhati ‘he sacrifices’ (on jũhati see § 3.4) and jaggati ‘lies awake’ from (OIA) 3pl. juhvati and *jāgrati*¹.

Verbs of the old 5th class² were often transferred to the 9th class (a tendency already present in the Vedic language): ocināti ‘gathers’, vicināti ‘examines’ ([°]cinoti), pāpuṇāti ‘attains, reaches’ (prāpnoti), sakkuṇāti ‘is able’ (śaknoti)³, suṇāti ‘hears’ (śṛṇoti)⁴. Thus the (n)o-present, which disturbs the verbal system of a- and e-presents, was gradually superseded by the (n)ā-present which fitted in better. And even the small difference in vocalism (°asi / °ati :: °āsi / °āti) was finally levelled: gaṇhati ‘grasps’, (imp.) pāpuṇa ‘attain!’ (Thī 432), suṇa ‘hear!’ (Thī 404), (opt.) kiṇe ‘he may buy’ (Ja V 375,26*), pāpuṇe ‘he will reach’ (Ja I 275,18*, Dhṛp 138, Sn 324), (°)mine ‘I shall create’ (Ap 29,26), ‘he will measure’ (Ja V

² munāti, Dhṛp 269, probably based on √mnā (see Sadd V 1695), is used to ‘explain’ the word muni- (see OBERLIES 1999: 42). This accounts for its u-vowel (cf. VON HINÜBER § 157).

³ On sakkati (Ja I 290,23) see GEIGER § 148.c (Th 533 [Ee ... sakkati deva-devo], however, should be corrected to maññām’ ahaṃ Sakka’si deva-devo [see NORMAN 1969: 207]). For Prakrit (sakkaṇomi, sakkuṇomi, sakkai, sakkei) see PISCHEL § 505.

⁴ See GEIGER § 147 / 148 (pāpuṇāti and sakkuṇāti) and OBERLIES (1999: 36-37).

stanati ‘moans’ (different from √stan ‘to thunder’ [see NARTEN. Kleine Schriften I,407]) and (Epic Skt.) stuvate ‘praises’ must have been crossed with a class IX verb to yield ¹*thuṇāti* / thunāti ‘moans’ (anutthunāmi, Ja V 479,10*, anutthunam, Ja III 114,6*, anutthunāti, Sn 827) and ²*thuṇāti* / thunāti ‘praises’ (thunanti, Sn 884, anutthunanti, Sn 901). But I do not know what this second verb is (bhaṇati / bhaṇāti / bhaṇanti?). GEIGER’s explanation (§ 149) fails to convince. For Pkt. see PISCHEL § 494 (for bhaṇāi ibid. § 514).

468,18*), suṇe 'I may hear' (Ja IV 240,29*). A number of verbs were analogically transformed into presents of the ya-class¹: ²*ghāyati* 'smells' ([jighrāti] :: *sāyati*² 'tastes' [svādate] / *khāyati 'eats' [khādati]), *n(a)hāyati/sināyati*³ 'bathes' (:: [pass.] *snāyate), yāyati 'goes, walks' ([yāti⁴] :: thāyati 'stands', see p. 214), vāyati 'blows' ([vāti⁵] :: vāyu- 'wind'). Other athematic verbs were supplemented or replaced by new creations based (e.g.) on the imperative ([ā]deti / °dheti ← dehi / dhehi 'give!' / 'put!') or aorist (ghasati 'eats, devours' ← ghásat, pāheti 'sends' ← pāhesi [√hi])⁶.

The possible contraction of -aya- > -e- and -ava- > -o- (see § 11.4 and 12.4) led to various doublets: jeti ~ jayati 'wins', ḍemāna- 'flying' (Ja II 443,10* [so read with B^d]) ~ ḍayamāna- (Ja IV 347,26*), hoti ~ bhavati 'is' (see § 44.2). And in line with that model, even primary -e- could be resolved into -aya-: acceti (atyeti) → accayanti (≠ atiyanti) 'they pass by', Th 145, S I 109,1* (accayeyya, Sn 781)⁷, etu → ayantu (≠ yantu) 'let them

(1) After the pattern °āma : °āmase, °anti : °ante a medium of atthi is formed based on 1pl. asma, amha ‘we are’ – themselves analogical to asmi ‘I am’ (and its by-form amhi) and probably due to the abl. endings -smā and -mhā also with -ā as final – and 3pl. santi ‘they are’: (1pl.) smase, Sn 595, amhase, amhāse, Ja III 309,27*, VI 553,14*², D II 275,11* (āgat’ amhāse), (3pl.) sante, Sn 868. § 45. Not only were old athematic verbs transferred to the 'first conjugation' (see § 44) but also 'thematic' ones were transformed into root-presents¹, i.e. ā- and e-verbs of the 'second conjugation', either by analogy (°[t]thāti 'stands' :: yāti 'goes'², [upa]gāti 'sings' < gāyati 'sings'³, akkhāti 'preaches' :: [2/3sg. aor.] akkhā 'you/he preached') or by 'shortening' (<bi>bhemi 'I fear', S I 111,2* [see § 11 rem. c]⁴, vi<ja>hāmi 'I abandon [= I spit out]', Ja VI 78,15*, <da>dāmi 'I give', Pv 60 [as read by Pv-a], Cp 17 [as read by the Siamese edition, see Ee p. 2 n. 14]).

Many more verbs, however, were transferred to the e-class⁵. For the most part this transference started from the verbal adjective in °ita-⁶: uṭṭheti 'stands up' (← uṭṭhita-), phuseti 'touches' (← phusita-), Thī 6, ²*seti* 'binds' (← sita-), Ja IV 11,20*⁷. These e-verbs are often distinguished from e-causatives by their a-vocalism (bhajeḥi 'pay honour!', Ja III 148,13*, ~

There is no trāti 'protects' in Pāli (pace GEIGER § 138), and tāyati is the old present (see WACKERNAGEL, Kleine Schriften p. 423 n. 1).

⁴ Is vihemi, Ja V 154,19*, a wrong reading instead of bibhemi as is (probably) vibheti, Ja V 509,21* (see PED s.vv. vibheti / viheti?)

² GEIGER gives just one example for a 1sg. ind. pres. in -am (for Prakrit see ALSDORF, Kleine Schriften p. 58-59, BHAYANI, Sambodhi 7 [1978/79] 114, and BALBIR, in: Dialectes dans les littératures indo-aryennes [édité par COLETTE CAILLAT]. Paris 1989, 509): gacchaṃ, Thī 306, however, is the 1sg. of the future of gacchati (see VON HINÜBER § 420). jānaṃ, which NORMAN (1991: 181-182) claims to be a 1sg., is likely to be a ‘frozen’ participle (see VON HINÜBER, l.c.).

On Prakrit -ami (a remodelling of -āmi after -asi and -ati) – unknown to Pāli – see PISCHEL § 454 and BALBIR, in: Dialectes dans les littératures indo-aryennes (édité par COLETTE CAILLAT). Paris 1989, 514.

⁴ In analogy with -āmi (and after the model of the old nā-class [pacināsi, Ja III 22,2*]) 2sg. and 3sg. sometimes also have -āsi and -āti (see GEIGER § 123 and VON HINÜBER § 413; cf. SMITH 1950: 34, CAILLAT, IF 75 [1970] 302-303, and OBERLIES 1993/94: 167 with n. 113): kim-atthiko tāta khaṇāsi khāsuṃ (- ॥ -), Ja IV 46,10*, kiṃ gijjha paridevāsi (- ॥ -), Ja III 331,2*, sādhū paṭibhaṇāsi me (- ॥ -), Ja III 405,8*, bhaṇāti ... ⁶ C^{ks} read °damasi; quoted as ukkantāmasi, Sadd 842,10, okk °, ibid. 511,18, 628,8.

⁷ Though this ending is only very sporadically used, it seems to live on in New Indo-Aryan and Dardic languages (see BLOCH 1965: 235, TURNER 1975: 289-299, and OBERLIES, Historische Grammatik des Hindi. Reinbek 1998, 37 n. 44).

⁸ Cf. ottape, S I 154,33* (so read [see CPD s.v. anottāpi(n); cf., however, CPD s.v. ottapati]). Vasudevahiṇḍi has a 1sg. ātm. in -ahe (ALSDORF, Kleine Schriften p. 59).

⁹ As far as I can see maññivho ‘you boast’, Ja III 311,26*, is used as an indicative pure and simple (on 2pl. -vhe – an indicative ending taught by the Pāli grammarians – see VON HINÜBER § 423).

¹⁰ A pure indicative value of this ending is postulated by GEIGER (§ 122.2) for abhinandāmase ‘we are pleased’, Vv 156, and tappāmase ‘we are tired’, Vv 153. But also below, 2.; cf. opt. 1pl. in -emase)¹. The last one has a by-form -are (see p. 8 n. 6)² – known from Aś G RE XIII (anuvatare)³ – which is used for the future and aorist as well (see § 48-49)⁴.

ohadāmase, Ja II 355,7*, is a statement pure and simple without any ‘imperative’ nuance. The same seems to hold good for jahāmase, Ja VI 550,24*, 553,17*, panudāmase, Ja VI 491,19*, and bhavāmase, Ja VI 567,10*, Th 1128. And this ending is used also in the future tense (lacchāmase, Vv 320, sikkhissāmase, Sn 814).

The Vasudevahiṇḍi uses -mahe as 1sg. (see ALSDORF, Kleine Schriften p. 59).

³ Prakrit grammarians give īre for the 3pl. ātmanepada – an ending not attested in literature (see PISCHEL § 458 and LEUMANN, Morphologische Neuerungen im altindischen Verbalsystem. Amsterdam 1952, p. 10).

The final -a of these endings may be lengthened by pluti (see § 6.3b): mā pabbajā ‘do not go forth’, Ja V 184,25* (Āryā), nikkhaṇaṃ ‘bury!’ (see § 4.6). The rare 1pl. in *-mu*⁶ (pappomu ‘may we attain’, Ja V 57,19*; frequently attested in 1pl. opt. -emu, see below) is a remodelling of regular -ma (see above) after -tu and *-s(s)u*⁷. rem. It has been surmised that the imperative endings -āhi / -ātu / -ātha, attested also with Aśoka, are remains of a historic subjunctive (see also NORMAN, Traces of the Subjunctive in Middle Indo-Aryan, in: Facets of Indian Culture. Gustav Roth Felicitation Volume. Patna 1998, 97-108). More probably, however, this -ā- is due to paradigmatic levelling (see SMITH 1950: 34 and CAILLAT, IF 75 [1970] 302-303). (3) The optative has two sets of suffixes – one with generalised -e- (based on OIA 3sg. -et), one with -eyyā- (a contamination of the OIA thematic and athematic endings, starting from 1sg./3pl. -eyam/-eyuh, see § 14.9)¹ –, and two sets of endings, (a) the old optative endings (the -ā[≠] of the athematic ones, supported by that of the second set of endings [-eyyāmi ... -eyyāma], was retained except for the 3sg. [see below]) and (b) those of the indicative present (with substitution of secondary -ta by primary -tha): (1sg.) *-eyyam*², -eyyāmi, -e, (2sg.) -eyya, -eyyāsi, -esi, (3sg.) -eyya, -eyyāti, *-e*³, (1pl.) -eyyāma, *-emu*⁴, (2pl.) *-eyyātha*⁵, (3pl.) *-eyyu(m)*⁶. ² Prakrit has also a 1sg. in -jjam not noted by PISCHEL (see ALSDORF, Kleine Schriften p. 59).

³ A rather strange form is 3sg. apace ‘he should honour’, A IV 245,6*, Ap 581,19 (see CPD s.vv. ²*apaca*, apacāyati).

⁴ Not attested is expected -ema* < (OIA) -ema – at least not in canonical texts (Sn 898 sikkhema must be a wrong reading [cf. VON HINÜBER, MSS 36 (1977) 47 n. 23], and ujjhema, Ja VI 138,14*/16*, is an indicative [VON HINÜBER 1994: 145 pace CPD s.v. ujjhati]) – though it is found in Aśokan Prakrit (see VON HINÜBER § 438; ibid. § 442 on hañchema, Ja II 418,11*). On ujjheti see MANU LEUMANN, Kleine Schriften p. 342-347, and HAEBLER, MSS 16 (1964) 23-24.

has (2sg.) -etho, -etha, *-eyyātho*¹, (3sg.) *-etha*², (1pl.) *-emase*³. The 2sg. active in *-esi*⁴ is an analogical formation: -esi : -e = -eyyāsi : *-eyya*⁵. This latter ending goes back to -eyyā* whose final -ā was shortened according to § 4.4. The 1pl. act. in *-emu*⁶ is due to the blending of optative -ema* (see (Athematic) -īta is used instead of (thematic) -eta already in the Brāhmaṇas, and the Mahābhārata (but not the Rāmāyaṇa [!]) has quite a lot of instances.

§ 47. The regular optative of both ‘conjugations’ is that in -e(yya)- (see § 46.3)¹. But some historical forms of the optative of athematic verbs were preserved: siyā/assa ‘it may be’ (see p. 3), dajjam ‘I should give’, Vin I 148,25 (dajjāham), Ja VI 515,19*², dajjāsi ‘you should give’, Ja VI 251,26*, dajjā ‘(if) he were to give’, Th 468, D II 267,10*, Dhp 224, S I 57,32*, kuriyā ‘he might do’, Ja VI 206,12*, ~ (2/3sg.) kayirā, Ja II 42,8*, V 112,27*, Th 152, Dhp 53, Sn 728 ≠ 1051, (^o)jāniyā ‘he certainly knows’, Th 85, Sn 713 (with -i- from optatives like kayirā), jāniyāma ‘we should know’, Sn 873³, (vi)jaññam ‘I should know’, Sn 482, jaññāsi ‘you should know’, Ja VI 194,11*⁴, (anu)jaññā ‘he would know’, Ja II 42,12*, V 63,8*, VI 36,14*, Th 10, Dhp 157, Sn 116, 394, 397-398 (probably analogical to *dajjā*⁵). And these relics were the pattern for new ‘athematic’ optatives (vajj^o [← vadati] ‘might say’, Ja V 221,21*, VI 19,4*, 82,6*, 526,35*, 551,14*, Thī 307-308, Sn 859, 971)⁶.

Sporadically the suffix -e(yya)- was added to the optative stem in ^{(i)y-}: anuppadajjeyyāsi ‘you should hand over’, D III 61,10, anupadajjeyya ‘he should hand over’, Vin III 259,13 = 36, anupadajjeyyāma ‘we should hand over’, Vin III 259,11 = 35, dajjeyyātha ‘you should give’,

² Here dajjam is used as preterite ‘I gave’ (see NORMAN 1991: 179), a usage of the optative known from Epic Sanskrit (cf. EDGERTON, JAOS 57 [1937] 32-33, and KATRE, NIA 1 [1938] 536).

³ Cf. jāniyāmase, M II 143,11*.

Vin I 232,7, pakampiye ‘he will bend’, Ja VI 295,9* (C^k), maddiye ‘he shall crush’, Cp 271, haññe ‘he should kill’, A IV 254,17*¹. And often imperative endings were attached: dajjehi ‘may you give!’, Vin III 217,4. On the analytic optative see § 46.3 (end).

§ 48. The preterite replaced the (OIA) aorist, imperfect and perfect, supplemented by the verbal adjective (with/without hoti) used as verbum finitum (see § 56 rem. a). The core of this tense is the (OIA) aorist; historical forms of the imperfect and perfect were integrated into its paradigms (or transformed into aorists [āhamsu ‘they said’ ← āha ‘he said’², [a]vedi ‘he knew’ ← veda ‘he knows’]³): (imperfect⁴) kasam, Thī 112, amaññam ‘I thought’, Ja V 215,6*, pavapam ‘I sowed’, Thī 112, adadam ‘I gave’, Vv 622, adadā ‘you gave’, Ja V 161,8*, VI 571,20*, abravī ‘he

Since the context of Ja II 137,28* excludes an aorist, vaṇimhase (cf. icchāma, ct.) must be regarded as a wrong reading for vaṇem(h)ase (on which see p. 225 n. 1 [diff. PED s.v. vaṇeti]).

³ Cf. pucchittha, Mhv XVII 33, jīyittha, Ja I 468,2*, ruccittha, Vin III 175,22 = Dh-pa I 13,23, sandittha, D II 129,33, paṭivedayittha, Ja V 32,19*, (pass.) adissittha, Th 170, dīyittha, S I 58,9, sūyittha, Dh-pa I 16,3.

⁴ This is also the case in Prakrit (see PISCHEL § 517) where -itthā is used also for 2pl. and 3pl.

⁵ See GEIGER § 159.IV. For Prakrit see PISCHEL § 517, BHAYANI, Sambodhi 7 (1978/79) 115, and BALBIR, in: Dialectes dans les littératures indo-aryennes (édité par COLETTE CAILLAT). Paris 1989, 507-508.

after the pattern of akāsim ‘I made’ : akāsi ‘he made’¹. The historical ending -isam (of the old iṣ-aorist) is – due to the mutual influence of aorist and future (see § 49) – often replaced by *-issam*² (though sometimes only secondarily: musāvadaṃ abhāsissam [ـَـ] ‘I spoke [the oath] falsely’, Pv 33 as read by Pv-a [see § 18.7]): agacchisam ‘I went’, Th 258, apaccisam ‘I was cooked’, Thī 436, abhuñjisam ‘I ate’, Th 1056, atimaññisam ‘I despised’, Pv 40³, nikkhamissam ‘I went out’, Ja IV 330,27* (nikkhamim, ct.), adhigacchissam ‘I obtained’, Sn 446, sandhāvissam ‘I wandered through’, Dh 153, nandissam ‘I rejoiced’, S I 176,12*, pavissam ‘I entered’, Ja IV 330,19*, (a)pucchissam ‘I asked’, Sn 1116, Ap 563,17, (a)maññis(s)am ‘I thought’, Th 342, 424, 765, M III 247,2, Ap 547,17, vandissam ‘I worshipped’, Th 480, 621, Ap 334,4. 3pl. (agam)um – comparatively rare in old texts (Sn 290, 302 = 306, 415, 1014, Ja V 112,30*, VI 156,25*)⁴ – has taken over the ending of type 3.

¹ See Oldenberg, Kleine Schriften p. 1170. GEIGER (§ 159.IV), however, regards -im as the direct continuation of Vedic (akram)im.

The augment a-¹ is prefixed when (a) the aorist would be monosyllabic without it (adā). And it is used (at least in the language of the canon) with (b) all disyllabic aorists except for continuations of the iṣ-aorist (type 4) where it is facultative ([a]labhi). It is facultative also with (c) polysyllabic aorists, (generally²) apart from those which were enlarged within Pāli (*agamāsi*³) or which continue old imperfects or thematic aorists (abhāsattha)⁴.

¹ Sometimes the augment is 'misplaced' or even added in a wrong way (see CPD s.vv. ²a [rem. a/b] / ajjha and OBERLIES 1997: 12; cf. BHSG § 32.2): a-paribṛūhayi, Ja V 361,16*, pacc-a-niyyāhi, D II 22,16, ajjh-a-bhāseyya, Ja V 351,3*. This happens rather often with pāpuṇāti which was regarded as a verb on its own: a-pāpuṇim, Ap 59,6, 64,24, 371,30.

mā is used in Pāli not only with unaugmented, but also with augmented aorists (and also with other verb forms; see PED s.v. mā and cf. CPD s.v. ²a-; cf. BHSG § 42).

Occasionally even finite verb forms are compounded with the negative prefix a(n)- (see CPD s.vv. ³a- [7.], anūpaneyya, apatthave, BHSD s.v. a-, an-, NORMAN 1992: 309 [ad Sn 799] and OBERLIES 1995: 106 [s.v. ³a-(7)]): (accharāsaṃghātamattam pi cetosantiṃ) an-ajjhagaṃ 'Not (even for the duration of a snap of the fingers) have I obtained (peace of mind)', Th 405 (na labhiṃ, ct.). For Prakrit see PISCHEL § 464 (asiyā = na syāt).

Beside these forms Pāli has (though rarely) an e-preterite¹: (2sg.) bhuñje 'you ate', Ja III 144,24* (with v.l. bhuñji), udassaye 'you raised up', Ja V 26,13* (ussāpesi, ct. [so read]²), nibbāpaye 'you extinguished', Ja III 157,8* = IV 61,28* = Pv 379, (3sg.) anusāse 'he instructed', Ja VI 291,13*, apakkame 'he went away', S I 124,7*, nicchare 'issued forth', Ap 320,5, nijjhāpaye 'he made (me) reflect', Ja IV 87,2*, upanāmaye 'he gave', Ja IV 408,7* (BeCeSe °ayi). This form is (in the last resort) an optative used as a preterite³, and only the Buddhāpadāna uses this ending (-e < -eḥ / -et) for 1sg.⁴: abhivādaye 'I saluted', Ap 1,10 (so B^p [Ee °vādayim]; see CPD s.v. abhivādeti), āhane 'I have beaten (the drum)', Ap 5,25, āhare 'I offered', Ap 1,12, māpaye 'I built', Ap 1,13.

Both have the endings of the indicative present⁴ (the medium is attested in the forms -se, -te, -mase and -are, see § 46.1), the 1sg. has -am in addition to -āmi (see also § 46 [p. 217]). kariṣy- / [a]hārṣ- x hariṣy-)¹ and which led to the use of -issam as a preterite ending (see p. 241), points to the fact that this ending is taken from the aorist. As a terminational element, the future ending was subject to lenition² (see § 18.7): karis<s>āmi ‘I shall make’, Ja III 161,14*, Ap 72,31, khīyis<s>anti ‘they will be abandoned’, Ja V 392,4*, caris<s>āmi ‘I shall wander’, Ja III 381,21*, IV 487,12*, dakkhisāma ‘we shall see’, Ja III 99,7*³, passis<s>āmi ‘I shall see’, Pv 528, phusis<s>am ‘he will realise’, Th 386⁴, phusis<s>ati ‘he will touch’, Sn 693, bhavis<s>ati ‘there will be’, Sn 691-694, Pv 575, muccis<s>ati ‘he will be released’, Ja VI 449,3*⁵, parirakkhis<s>āmi ‘I shall guard’, Ja IV 480,11*, sikkhis<s>āmase ‘we shall train ourselves’, Sn 814. ¹ See SCHWARZSCHILD (1991: 1-5). On the endings see above, § 7.12. ALSDORF, Kleine Schriften p. 61, pointed out that the archaic language of the Vasudevahiṇḍi knows future forms with -ī- due to compensatory lengthening (ghattīhaṃ, 51,22, bhuñjīhaṃ, 22,28, pucchīhāmo, 89,21, dacchīhāmo, 138,7) and that "the 'missing link' between -issaṃ and -īhaṃ is supplied by the Mahānisiha, where futures in -īsaṃ occur, e.g. vimuccīsaṃ sujjhīsaṃ" (l.c. n. 1). Diff. on the h-future BERGER (1955:79).

² The twofold future of bhavati is conditioned by the development hessati < bhaviṣyati on the one hand (hessaṃ, Ja III 224,3*, Th 1100, Pv 62, hessāmi, Thī 460, hessati, Ja III 279,16*, hessāma, Bv II 72, hessatha, S IV 179,24, hessanti, Ja VI 524,10*), and the influence of the vocalism of the present hoti on the other.

⁶ Ee reads āhañhi ‘me’ which can be interpreted as sandhi of /āhañhiṃ ime/ (see p. 117). And this āhañhiṃ would be the regular saṃprasāraṇa-form of āhan-t-syam* (cf. VON HINÜBER § 474).

² The relationship of the futures gacchati and gacchissati is the same as between dakkhati / sakkhati and dakkhissati / sakkhissati (see BLOCH 1965: 227). See also p. 245 n. 3 and 246 n. 3.

³ This form is not haplogically shortened (NORMAN 1969: 123 [ad Th 14] pace GEIGER § 65.2). But haplogy can account for gacchiss’ (ādāya) ‘you will go’ (< gacchissasi), Ja VI 543,20* (which TRENCKNER 1908: 126 corrects to gañchis’ ādāya), and sakkhi ‘you will be able’ (sakkhihi*), Ja V 116,5* (cf. ALSDORF, Kleine Schriften p. 314, and OBERLIES 1996: 116 n. 137). Or did *-ihi develop to -i (cf. dhūtā < dihūtā* [see p. 175 n. 2])?

⁴ This was made possible as the indicative present can be used instead of the future if the speaker is not very particular with the employment of tenses (see BERGER, MSS ²⁴ [1961] 29-41, who, however, explains gañch° as a misspelling of gacch° [cf. VON HINÜBER 1994: 128]). And some languages even do without a future tense as (e.g.) Indo-European (see BEEKES, Comparative Indo-European Linguistics: An Introduction. Amsterdam 1995, 226).

⁵ See GEIGER § 172, CPD s.v. āganta(r) and VON HINÜBER § 475.

⁶ Here gantā is used as nom. pl.: ye ... hanti ... channā gantā te nirayaṃ adho (gantā-ro, ct.).

§ 50. The conditional¹, used as modus irrealis (see also p. 257-258), is formed from the (almost exclusively²) augmented future stem by adding the endings of the second aorist (3sg -issa < -issā according to § 4.4); only the 3pl. has -aṃsu: (1sg.) abhavissam 'I were', Ja I 470,15³, (2sg.) abhavissa, Ja III 30,6, (3sg.) agamissa 'he would go', M I 342,16, abhavissa, Ja III 335,11*, Vin I 13,38, (1pl.) alabhissāma 'we would get', Ja III 35,10, (3pl.) abhavissamsu, Vin I 13,31. Of the medium only the 3sg. in -tha is attested (okkamissatha 'it would have climbed down', D II 63,3, āpajjissatha 'it would have attained', D II 63,13).

§ 51. Denominatives (in the broad sense) are formed from 'nouns' (a) without⁴ or (b) with suffix -ya- (1. without [and -(a)ya- > -e-], 2. with lengthening of the preceding vowel⁵ [with a causative in -āpaya- /

§ 52. Pāli has causatives (see § 44) formed with the suffix -aya-/-e- from the root (chedeti 'causes to cut off', sāveti 'causes to be heard, declares') or – though rarely – from the present stem² (nacceti 'causes to dance', laggeti 'makes stick', tīreti 'accomplishes' [← tīrati* < *tīryate*³]). The causative-stem may show a vowel grade different from its base (CVCC- and [C]VC-bases usually remain): 1. CaC-roots generally have ā-vocalism as against -a- of the simplex (pātetī vs. patati); only Can/m-bases often do not have vowel alternation (gameti 'causes to go', janeti 'produces'; nikkhāmeti 'drives out' vs. kamati 'walks' [← krāmati]⁴); 2. Ci/eC- and Cu/oC-bases have e- and *o-*vocalism (deseti 'points out', codeti 'urges') and 3. *Cī/ū-*bases result in Cāy/v- (bhāyayati 'frightens'⁵, cāveti 'drives away, disturbs'). Sometimes the vowel grade varies rhythmically: namayati 'bends' vs. paṇāmeti 'dismisses'⁶. (Mostly) added to Cā-bases – which sometimes shorten their radical vowel¹ – is the suffix -paya-/pe: jāpeti ‘causes to be deprived’ (jyāpayati)², ñāpeti ‘explains’ (jñāpayati), yāpeti ‘keeps himself alive’ (yāpayati)³, nijjhapayati ‘has someone pardoned’ (nidhyāpayati; see § 5.4), vijjhāpeti ‘extinguishes’ (vikṣāpayati*)⁴, voropeti ‘deprives (someone) of (something)’ (avaropayati [√ruh]). This suffix was abstracted and added to any verb stem to form causatives (very frequently to present stems): laggāpeti ‘makes stick’ (based on laggati). If the base itself was a causative, the derivation had a ‘double causative’ meaning⁵: ṭhapāpeti ‘orders to be erected’ (based on ṭhapeti ‘erects’), bhāyāpeti ‘orders to frighten’, ropāpeti ‘causes to be planted’ (based on ropeti ‘plants’). chedāpeti ‘has cut’ and gāhāpeti ‘causes to seize’, two of the few instances where derivation and base seem to have identical meanings, are blends of chindāpayati and gaṇhāpeti (based on chindati ‘cuts off’ and gaṇhati ‘seizes’) and (the old causatives) chedayati and gāheti (see EDGERTON, Language 22 [1946] 99 with n. 10).

§ 53. The opposition of active and passive³ is shown not by the endings – the passive, too, has active endings (apart from frequent -are [p. 219]; on the imp. see § 46.2) –, but by the stems⁴: bajjhati ‘is bound’ vs. bandhati ‘binds’, parihīrati ‘is carried’ (see § 8.6) vs. pariharati ‘carries about’, harīyati ‘is carried’ vs. harati ‘carries’. Historical forms are preserved to a great extent ([C]V/VC-bases have [C]VCC-passive stems⁵), partly (a) remodelled after the present stem, or due to (b) rhythmical exigencies: paññāyati ‘is known, is perceived’ (prajñāyate), gayhati ‘is caught’ (grhyate), Vin I 88,35, dīyati/diyyati ‘is given’⁶ (dīyate, see §

rem. A few gerundives are used as action nouns: bhejja- ‘breaking’, Vin III 47,2 (see NORMAN 1993: 73).

§ 56. As the verbal adjective² is preserved largely in historical forms, it has become the most frequent irregular form of the verb system (especially in the ‘first conjugation’), very often unconnected with the present stem³: (sam)atta- ‘taken, gasped’ ([sam]ādadāti)⁴, bhūta- ‘become, produced’ (bhavati/hoti), laddha- ‘received’ (labhati), pakka- ‘baked, ripe’ (pacati), (paṭi)mukka- ‘tied to / released’ (muñcati)⁵, jāta- ‘born’ (jāyati), iṭṭha- ‘desired’ (icchati), sitta- ‘sprinkled’ (siñcati), kata- ‘made, done’ (karoti), (añ)ñāta- ‘(not) known’ (jānāti), (^o)ñatta- ‘reputation’, M I 318,29 (ñāpeti)⁶. Only the derived verbs have a consistent form in ^o*ita*-⁷ (as

² See GEIGER § 194-197 and VON HINÜBER § 492. For Prakrit see PISCHEL § 564-567.

³ See JACOBI § 67-69 and EDGERTON (1954: 79).

⁴ On this verbal adjective, which was replaced by ādinna-, see CAILLAT, BEI 7/8 (1989/90) 34-38 (see also SMITH 1952: 170 [on M I 388,19: kukkuravatam dīgharat-tam samattam samādiṇṇam]).

⁵ On such kk-verbal adjectives (especially in Prakrit) see VON HINÜBER § 493.

⁶ Sometimes the verbal adjective is adjusted to the present stem (see SAKAMOTO-GOTO, MSS 44 [1985] 183-184): luta- ‘cut off’, Ja VI 25,9* (~ lūna-, Thī 107) :: lunāti (see OBERLIES 1995a: 156), avakanta- ‘cut off’ (< ^o*kṛta*-) :: ^o*kantati*. abhiranta- ‘fond of’ (≠ abhirata-), however, is formed in analogy with kanta-.

⁷ See SMITH (1950: 14).

have some underived ones too, such as carati or khādati): kārita- ‘made to do’ (kāreti), kathita- ‘said, spoken’ (katheti), jighacchita- ‘hungry’ (jighacchati). Following this pattern ‘new’ verbal adjectives were derived from present stems¹: āharita- ‘brought’ (āharati), supita- ‘slept’ (supati). Thus two verbal adjectives often appear side by side: ²*puṭṭha*-/pucchita- ‘asked’ (pucchati), (pa)muñcita-/pamutta- ‘set free’ (muñcati)². And after this pattern – and after ‘historical’ groups such as paññatta- :: paññāpeti ‘arranges, provides’ – ‘short’ forms of verbal adjectives originated: patta- ‘fallen’ (patati)³, nijjhatta- ‘made to understand’ (nijjhāpayati ~ nijjhāpeti)⁴, paṭiyatta- ‘dressed’ (paṭiyādeti)⁵. Sporadically the suffix °ta- is substituted by °na-: dinna- ‘given’ (: datta-)⁶. On the other hand, milāta- ‘withered’ and luta- ‘cut off’ replaced (OIA) mlāna- and lūna- (see § 9.8).

² See GEIGER § 173.2.

³ Quite often the verbal adjective is used in the sense of an action noun (see BLOCH 1965: 274 and RENOU, Grammaire Sanscrite § 153c): akkutṭha- ‘reviling’, gata- ‘going’, Ja I 295,8*, rodita- ‘weeping’, Ja III 214,12*, hata- ‘killing’, Th 180 (see NORMAN 1969: 129 [ad Th 36], 1971: 116 [ad Th 261], 1992: 210 [ad Sn 331]).

By adding the suffix ^o*va(nt)*- to a verbal adjective an active participle is formed¹: bhuttava(nt)- ‘having eaten’, vusitava(nt)- ‘having spent’, (as)sutava(nt)- ‘(not) having heard, with(out) learning’ (inflected according to § 41). The suffix ^o*āvi(n)*-, a continuation of Vedic ^o*āvin*- ([see p. 8 pace GEIGER § 198.3), has the same function: anikīlitāvi(n)- ‘who has not yet enjoyed sensual pleasures in full’, assutāvi(n)- ‘not having heard, without learning’, katāvi(n)- ‘having done’, (vi)jitāvi(n)- ‘having conquered’, bhuttāvi(n)- ‘having eaten’ (inflected according to § 34)².

§ 57. The most usual infinitive suffix is ^o*(i)tum*³. In historical forms it is added to the root ([vi]ketum, sotum), in new formations to the present stem (pappotum, pucchitum, tikicchitum, sajjhāyitum, phassetu[m], Sn 393, [pass.] pamuccitum, Th 253)⁴. Sometimes it is enlarged by the particle *-ye*⁵ (with sporadic dropping of -ṃ): kātum-ye ‘to do’, Thī 418 (so read), gaṇetuye ‘to count’, Bv IV 28, jānitum-ye ‘to know’, Ja IV 463,9*¹, maritu-ye ‘to die’, Thī 426, hetu-ye ‘to become’ (bhavitum), Bv II 9. The suffix ṇave (< ṇavái) is inherited from Vedic Sanskrit (see p. 8). Historical forms served as models for new ones: kātave ‘to do’, Ja V 318,17*, Cp 318, Vv 738, (anuk)kamitave ‘to walk (after)’, S I 24,8* (so read [see CPD s.v. anukkamati]), gantave ‘to go’, Ja IV 221,26*, Thī 332, dātave ‘to give’, Ja IV 434,12*, Sn 286, Cp 129, 132, padātave ‘to take’, Ja I 190,3* (padātave ti + pādātave [see C^v] sandhivasena ākāralopo veditabbo, gaḥetum ti attho, ct.²), dharetave ‘to hold’, Ap 422,15, netave ‘to lead’, Dhp 180, S I 107,24*, (pa)muttave ‘to let free’, Ja IV 337,25*, yācitave ‘to beg’, Ja IV 452,18*, (sampa)yātave ‘to proceed’, Sn 834, vattave ‘to speak’, Ja III 309,9* = S I 205,2*, (pa)hātave ‘to abandon’, Th 186, Dhp 34, Sn 817, nidhetave ‘to lay down’, Ja III 17,6*, rajeta ‘to colour’, Th 1155, lapetave ‘to talk’, Ud 21,14*. ² -eyya seems to be a metrical variant of -īya which seems to have originated under the influence of the optative and the participium necessitatis (NORMAN [1990: 222] wrongly derives viceyya from vicarya – is this an error for vicārya?).

⁴ As in Sanskrit, the infinitive loses its final -ṃ when compounded with the word kāma:- jīvitū-kāma-, Dhp 123, daṭṭhu-kāma-, Sn 685 (see GEIGER § 207).

⁵ On this particle, comparable to Prakrit -je (see SCHWARZSCHILD 1991: 104-110 and OBERLIES 1993: 78 [s.v. -je]), see NORMAN (1971: 154-155). Such forms, i.e. ^o*um-je*, are used in Prakrit as absolutives (see BHAYANI, Sambodhi 7 [1978/79] 115; cf. PISCHEL § 576).

³ On this phrase see FORSSMAN, StII 13/14 (1987) 69-76.

⁴ We have only a few instances of an absolutive in -ttā (see p. 269).

⁵ abhijānāti is systematically construed with the absolutive (s. PIND, Buddhavi-dyāsudhākaraḥ. Studies in Honour of Heinz Bechert on the Occasion of His 65th Birthday. Swisttal-Odendorf 1997, 535 n. 63).

The most common suffix (^o*tvā* [1]), which is not only added to verbs without prefix (as ^o*[i]yā*² is not confined to verbs with prefix), seems to be a Sanskritisation of genuine ^o*tā* (< ^o*tvā*; see § 1)³ which is preserved only very sporadically and then mostly remodelled (bhuttā, Ja V 465,6*⁴, [a]-diṭṭhā [(a)dr̥ṣṭvā], Ja V 215,28*, 218,18*, 220,2*, hiṃsitaṃ [hiṃsitvā], Ja IV 142,14*, kattaṃ [see § 4.6])⁵. ⁸ Unknown to Pāli is the usage of the infinitive as absolutive and vice versa (for Prakrit see PISCHEL § 576-577, 579, 585, 588, 590 and OBERLIES 1993: 131 n. 147), unless abhihaṭṭhum (see p. 266) is an example.

was enlarged by -na(ṁ) in analogy with °tvāna(ṁ), as was the abs. in °(i)yā (5, 6)¹. The absolutive in *°am*² (8) is of two-fold origin: a) the Vedic ṇamul-absolutive (of the form preverb-root[full or lengthened grade]-*am*³), b) nom. sg. masc. of the present pariciples in -am used as absolutive (see p. 177-178).

² See CPD, Epilegomena 20* (s.v. abs.) and NORMAN (1969: 125-126, 1971: 65-66, 1992: 299-300).

6.5. Concordance to PISCHEL's Grammatik der Prakrit-Sprachen

The above concordance of GEIGER's Pāli. Literatur und Sprache and VON HINÜBER's Das ältere Mittelindisch im Überblick (2001) and the present Pāli grammar on the one hand and the following concordance to PISCHEL's Grammatik der Prakrit-Sprachen on the other may render this grammar helpful for Prakrit studies, too – hopefully all the more as a short summary of the contents and a number of addenda et corrigenda have been added to each paragraph of PISCHEL's grammar (indicated by an arrow [→]).

→ Cf. CHARPENTIER ad Utt XXIII 88: 'Keśi-Goyamao (scil. of Utt XXIII 88) ... is certainly identical with Sct. Keśi-Gautamayoh. PISCHEL § 360 &c. categorically denies that there exist any traces of the dual in the middle Indian dialects, but such are undeniably met with, although they certainly are very rare. It would probably be imprudent to deny that, for instance, āṇāpāṇū (PISCHEL § 105) is to be explained as anything else but Sct. ānaprāṇau' (see also NORMAN 1991: 115-117 and YAMAZAKI, JIBS XXVIII.1 [1979] 148-149).

A Handbook of Pāli Literature

1996. XIII, 257 pages. Cloth. ISBN 3-11-014992-3

2000. XIII, 257 pages. Paperback. ISBN 3-11-016738-7

(Indian Philology and South Asian Studies, Vol. 2)

The Handbook deals with the whole of the literature in Pāli, the liturgical language of Theravāda Buddhism, which is still alive in Ceylon and South East Asia. In addition to reviewing the canonical texts (Tipitaka), which form the oldest body of extant Buddhist literature, and their commentaries, the Handbook presents the later Pāli literature, written after the 12th century, much of which is only available in Oriental prints. The account not only summarises the findings of earlier research, but extends the scope of a handbook by demonstrating new methodological approaches to the canonical literature, for example by showing how the strict formal structure of the Sūtra texts is determined in part by their oral transmission. Questions of the authorship of the commentaries on the canon (post-5th century AD) are revisited and the chronology of the texts critically examined. By comparing parallel commentaries, insights are gained into the structure of this comprehensive yet unexplored area of Pāli literature. Access to the Handbook is provided by a number of indexes.
